The Returned Gold Hunter, OR WOMAN'S LOVE.

BY F. A. CONLEY.

"So, you have made up your mind, I see, to go to California," said Margaret Pierpont, to her young and ambitious lover, Henry Chase.

"Yes, Margaret," I have, was his sad reply.

"And what will your poor Mag. do when you are gone," she asked. "Oh! I'll be very lonesome, indeed. I would not go, if I were you, Henry."

"I must go," said Henry, "for you know well, Margaret, that work is very dull here now, and if I remain idle much longer, I will spend the few hundred dollars I have, and I think it a much better plan now to go to the golden land of California to try my fortune, than to remain in Boston, where I have no hopes of either work or money."

"How long do you think you will remain there, Henry?" asked Margaret anxiously.

"If fortune smiles upon me, Margaret, I'll remain about three years; but if fortune should frown on me, I will remain there about five years."

"Five years, Henry!" exclaimed Margaret, looking up into his dark, expressive eyes.

"Ah! that's a long, very long time for us to be severed from each other."

"I know it is," answered Henry, sorrowfully, "but I have one consolation in my heart, and that is, that you will love me when I'm gone, as dearly as you do now. Will you not, my Margaret?"

"I will, I will, Henry. I never can love another. But when do you intend to leave us, Henry?"

"One week from to-day, Margaret, if God spares me."

"Do you sail from Boston or New York?"

"I will sail from good old Boston, the dear native land of my nativity."

"What is the vessel's name you intend going in?"

"She is called the 'Tempest,' and she is now lying at Constitution wharf; but come, tell me Margaret, what are you thinking about? You look sad—you tremble from head to foot."

"Ah, Henry, a sad thought entered my mind, just now, and I fear it will turn out true."

"Come, tell me, what it was Margaret."

"Something tells me, Henry, that I shall never become your wife."

from Boston, and I'll furnish it to your liking, and you shall be its mistress and lady overseer. What do you think of that picture, Margaret? Is it not beautiful?"

"Too beautiful to become real, Henry, taking into consideration your present circumstances."

"What you say is very true, Margaret, but have not others in times gone by been as poor as I am now, and by their perseverance and untiring energy accumulated both wealth and honor, and died respected by all who knew them?"

"Very true, Henry, but all that is not for the future, is doubtful. It is one thing to start in the race and another thing to win the golden purse."

"What you say is true enough, Margaret, but unless we venture, you know, we can never win. It is noble to try to accomplish any good enterprise even if we should fail."

"Fail! ah, that's the very word I most fear, Henry. What if you should return to Boston again worse off than when you left?"

"Even then, Margaret, I'd have my trade to fall back on for an honest livelihood, and I am sure that you would love me as deeply and as sincerely as ever. Would you not?"

"Yes, Henry, I think so."

"You think so! How is this, Margaret? You do not waver; you would not, could not, prove false to me, when—but I am foolish to speak thus to you or doubt your ardent love toward me. So give me one good sweet kiss, and let us hope for the future. There, and there."

"But my father and mother Henry, you know that they are not over partial to you."

"I am well aware of that unpleasant fact, Margaret, but no matter, when I return from California, they will forget their prejudices against me."

"They have but one fault towards you, and that is, you are poor."

"And that is the great reason Mag. that I wish to leave you for a few short years to better my condition, and return to you again with my pockets lined with gold. But here comes your sister Ellen, and she looks as grave as a nun, and as gentle as a dove."

"Good morning Henry and Ellen. Why you are quite a stranger. Where have you kept yourself of late? Come, give an account of yourself."

"I've been out of town finishing some work that was to be done on Mr. Langley's new house."

"That's a sufficient excuse, truly, but the reason why I wished to bring you to an account for your non-appearance for the last two Sabbaths, was, sister Margaret felt sad and downhearted in your absence, and—"

"Why Ellen, I wish you would keep still. You are a real torment to me. That sister of mine, Henry, is always tormenting the very soul out of me; she is so full of her jokes and funny hints. But if I mistake not she wants to have you herself, for she always speaks of you in the highest terms."

"Ha, ha, ha! Capital joke that," said Henry. Well then," he continued, laughingly, "I'll marry you both. Come tell me how will that do?"

A good hearty laugh from the sisters and Henry put an end to the above conversation; and Ellen anxious to change the topic, said, "well Henry, what's the news, tell us?"

"He's going to California," replied Margaret, ere Henry had time to answer.

"Going to California! impossible. Are you really going there, Henry?" said Ellen, with astonishment.

"I am, Ellen, I leave Boston for the gold regions next week, if nothing intervenes between now and then to prevent me. What do you think of it?"

"Why, I think this much of it, said Ellen, looking smilingly at her sister, that if I was—I know who, I would not let you go at any rate."

"But I am going to make a fortune, Ellen," replied Henry, "what do you think of that?"

"That's all very good, Henry, but what if you should lose your fortune after you had it accumulated, or worse still, lose your life, and be devoured up by those wild beasts, and tigers, so numerous in California."

"That does not trouble me much; besides, I'll stand as good a chance as hundreds of other young men, that go there in search of fortunes; but it is now nine o'clock, and I'll have to bid you a good night."

"Don't be in such a hurry, said Ellen. You must come and see us every evening until you leave. Now bear that in mind, Henry."

so very kind and agreeable to us, I know well we shall miss him very much."

"Henry is a good, kind, ambitious fellow, said Margaret, but you know he is poor, and father and mother does not like him on that account."

"Well, but you love him sister, do you not?" put in Ellen. "I'm sure you do, and being of age, you are not bound to obey father nor mother, nor anybody else, when their advice would mar your whole future life; these are my sentiments."

"Ah, it is very easy to talk, Ellen, but would you do so if you were me; against our parents' wishes? Answer me that."

"You are well aware, Margaret, that we have been good and dutiful daughters to our parents, and have up to this very hour obeyed them in all things; but I think that there are times when even parents make mistakes as well as children. Now if I loved a young man and knew that young man to be honest, upright, temperate and industrious, I would not give him up or be separated from him for worlds; and as for his being poor, it would draw my heart's affections and sympathies still nearer to him. Besides it does not follow as a matter of course, that he will remain so."

"What you say Ellen, is true enough, but people you know cannot live on love and nothing else. I would like to marry a rich man. There was Sarah Dexter and Jane Maynard, and Carolina Graves,—old school mates of mine, married rich men, and now they wear such fine dresses, and ride in their fine carriages, and go to all the concerts and theatres; why they have fine times, I am sure, and we are just as good, as handsome, and are as well educated as any of them; and I don't see why we can't be as fortunate as they have been."

"I am very sorry to hear you talk so, sister Margaret, and although you are two years older than I, yet it grieves me to hear you talk so foolishly."

"Foolishly! You don't call that foolish, Ellen, do you?"

"Yes, I do call it down right foolishness, sister, and if you loved Henry Chase as you should, (and as you make believe you do love him) you would not give utterance to such thoughts."

"Well, Ellen, I do love him a little I must confess, and I would love him still better if he was rich. I would like to marry a rich man—there."

"You say you love him a little, and before you were engaged to him, you yourself, told me repeatedly that you did love him. Then you knew that he was to be left some property by his grandmother, but since the old witch has left him but a hundred dollars, you have changed your mind. Ah, I fear sister, your love is not very deep for poor Henry when you allow such things to rise up between you."

"My love is one thing, sister Ellen, and yours I perceive is another. Pray what do you call true love, for I presume you must have experienced it very deeply by the tenor of your conversation."

"You are very wrong for once in your life, sister Margaret. I have never yet told any living man that I loved him, but I have loved and I do love one, and he knows it not, and I don't think he ever shall; and that one is now bound by the strongest ties of love and affection to another, and I love her too."

"Why that cannot be sister Ellen, you surely cannot love the girl that is to be married to the one you love. Oh, do tell me the name, will you?"

"His name you will never know I fear, but you asked me just now what I considered true love. I'll tell you in a very few words. It is to love one, and only one, not a half dozen as some young ladies do now a days. To be his, and his only, in riches or poverty, in health or sickness, in youth and old age, and to love him more and more, and better and better, when far away from friends and home, than if he were sitting by my side here in our cozy little parlor. And that's what I call true love sister Margaret."

"You are quite romantic sister Ellen, but I am really sorry to inform you that your ideas of love are very different from mine; but I'll ask you one question more and then we will retire for the night. Will you answer me candidly?"

"With the greatest pleasure Margaret."

"Well then, will you tell me what kind of a husband, (I mean what kind of a man) you would like to marry. Explain him physically, so that I can judge of your taste and mine."

"Why, I've told you before, — if he was honest, temperate, upright and industrious, and bore an unspotted reputation for honesty and candor, I would not care for his other defects, if defects he might have. I would not care the weight of a pin whether his stature was tall or short, his eyes blue or black, his forehead high or low, his hair jet black and curly, or light and straight, or whether his clothes was of the finest broadcloth or as coarse as a grater. And now sister, that I have told you my opinion about this matter, I would like to hear yours."

"There is no use in telling you Ellen, for I'm sure we cannot agree. I am sure of that."

"Well, no matter about that, let me know what kind of a man you would like to marry." And Ellen waited patiently for a few minutes to hear, as she thought, her sister's description of Henry Chase.

"Well, I'll tell you Ellen. In the first place, I would like him tall, beautifully formed, and as straight as an arrow. Then imagine a beautiful Grecian face and nose, with a pair of sparkling eyes, blue or black, I have no choice in that respect; but one thing I do like, viz: that he should wear a fine moustache and whiskers."

"Is that all," interrupted Ellen very gravely.

"No, not all sister," replied Margaret, "to crown the climax, I'd like that he should have a pretty soft and white hand, and a dear little pair of handsome feet, and what more than all these qualities, I'd like him to be rich. That's all sister. What do you think of the picture which I have drawn or painted for you?"

"I'm astonished Margaret, but I know you do not mean what you say."

"Why not, Ellen, I assure you, I'm sincere."

But the description you have just given does not correspond with the personal appearance of Henry Chase, and you, therefore, cannot mean—for you know he is to be your husband."

"I am not so sure of that, Ellen, for you are well aware that people, like the seasons, have their changes, in this little world of ours."

Very true, Margaret, but when people really and truly love each other, neither time, nor seasons, nor poverty, nor sickness, nor all the cunning arts of man can change them. They live in each other for each other, and what is bliss and joy to one, is bliss and joy to the other. And now, Margaret, I'm sorry to say that I see, for the first time in my life, that Henry Chase and you are widely different in your loves."

How is that Ellen, pray, tell me."

I will. Henry loves you too deeply,—aye, more than you now can conceive; for although he is not as beautiful as the ideal, which you have just spoken of, yet, in his young, manly and honorable bosom beats a heart, warm, true, confiding and affectionate. A heart, which is too noble, too brave and susceptible to be trifled with. And now, in conclusion, my good sister Margaret, I beg of you, before retiring to our bed, to drop at once your ideal beauty, and love with your heart the good and faithful Henry Chase, and you'll never rue it."

Ah! you are a severe governess sister, Ellen, but with all your good advice and sharp retorts, you cannot convince me, or make me a convert to your Quaker-like ideas, so now we'll go into the dining-room."

I do not feel very hungry Margaret, but I will accompany you for company's sake; and we must make no noise for fear that father and mother should hear us."

There is no danger, so come along Ellen, I feel real hungry, tired and sleepy."

David Pierpont, the father of Margaret and Ellen, kept a large retail grocery store, in the western section of Boston, and by his untiring industry, business tact, and good location, he accumulated the snug little sum of ten thousand dollars, which he invested in real estate. He gave his daughters a fine education, but Margaret, being the elder and handsomer, was a greater favorite both of the father and mother, than Ellen, and consequently they indulged her in everything that heart could wish or desire. In fact, she was what you might term "a spoiled child."

She was very fair, had large, coal-black eyes, rosy complexion, a beautiful set of white teeth, cherry lips, and was as symmetrical in form as nature and art could make her. She knew she was handsome, or she would not have looked into the looking-glass to arrange her dark-brown curls, of which she could boast a goodly number. From time to time she showed symptoms of that most despicable of all names "a coquette."

Ellen was not what some folks would term handsome, nevertheless, she was not homely; far from it, I assure you. She was very near as tall as her sister Margaret, and was more voluptuous and womanly. Ellen wore her hair very plain which gave her a neat, sensible and comely appearance; for, as she said herself, that she could not afford to spare time to curl her hair like her sister Margaret. She had a fine, honest-expressive face, and a full, bright and fascinating pair of hazel eyes, with a dimple in each of her cheeks; and her manner was very agreeable to a stranger at first sight. She knew well that her sister was the favorite of her father and mother, but she possessed too much solid sense to be jealous of Margaret who captivated at first all hearts. Margaret I would compare to a bursting sun breaking through a dense cloud, cheering all within and without for the time being; or I would compare her to a cataract which chains your attention and almost worship, while you are looking at it, but as soon as you leave it, you reflect on its beauty and unceasing noise, and defects, and the charm is gone forever."

Ellen I would compare to the sun, too, but in a different way. She reminded you very much of the sun when it rises gently from behind the dark horizon, the longer you look at it, the more beautiful it becomes; and when at eve you see it depart behind the gray old western hills, you would, if you could, have stayed its downward progress; or I'd compare her to the deep and silent river which murmurs not, but yet glides swiftly on through woods and silent forests, through green and flowery meadows, and golden harvest fields. Margaret dazzled; Ellen shone as brilliant as a star; Margaret was proud and full of hauteur; Ellen was independent and fascinating; Margaret was as the fresh and blooming rose in midsummer; Ellen was like the pure white lily, emblem of her own heart. What Margaret could accomplish with one glance from her piercing black eyes, Ellen would take weeks to accomplish. Margaret broke hearts, Ellen poured the oil of sympathy into the deep wounds and bound them up, and healed them as good as new."

Thus could I go on, would space permit me, and mete out to each their proper merits. Suffice it to say, kind reader, that they were as opposite in their characters, manners, looks, actions, dress and intellect, as night is from day."

Jane, said Mrs. Pierpont to her servant, go to the stairs and see if Margaret and Ellen are awake. Tell them to come down to breakfast as soon as possible, for Mr. Pierpont must go to the store."

Well, are they coming, Jane? enquired Mrs. P., who was very busily engaged making some nice buttered toast for breakfast, for she knew her pet, Margaret, was very fond of it."

Here we are, mother, said Margaret. Is breakfast ready, mother?"

Why of course it's ready child. Why here it is almost eight o'clock, and you have only just left your room. You must have set up late last night."

We did set up beyond our usual time, I must confess, mother, replied Ellen; we were talking over matters—"

With Henry Chase, interrupted her mother, frowningly.

O, he didn't remain long, said Margaret. But what do you think he told us? Now guess, mother."

I don't know nor do I care, was Mrs. Pierpont's sharp reply.

Why, I'll tell you mother, continued Margaret, he is going to California to hunt after gold! What do you think of that?"

I hope he'll have a fair wind, said her mother, (who was buttering the toast), and also find lumps of gold as big as brickbats; that is all the harm I wish him."

Come, come, hurry up the breakfast, said the husband as he entered the breakfast-room. I am in a great hurry and wish to go to the store immediately."

Breakfast is all ready, dear, replied Mrs. P., so sit down and I'll help you at once. Jane hand me the tea pot. Quick now, hand me the stake and toast; that's it."

Mr. Pierpont commenced eating very ravenously for a few minutes and then asked his wife to pour a little more cream in his cup, remarking at the time that tea or coffee without milk was a thing he could not relish."

Have you heard the news dear? asked Mrs. P.

The news, exclaimed Mr. P., what news? Henry Chase is going to California next week, so Margaret told me just now."

Why, that's the first I've heard of it. What put that notion into his head I should like to know."

You are aware, father, answered Margaret, that Henry is very ambitious for a young mechanic, and his greatest aim now is to become a rich man."

He'll never do much of any account, continued Mr. Pierpont, and besides he's as wild and as ungovernable as a young colt; but he has very many fine and sterling qualities in his nature for all that; and I am sure, I wish him every success in his gold hunting expedition."

Well, I'm glad that he is going replied Mrs. P., as she reached out her hand for the fourth piece of tempting toast."

Why do you say that? inquired Mr. P.

Well, I think he comes here a little too often of late, and Margaret keeps his company too much. I was going to put a stop to it this week, but I am now spared the trouble, as he intends leaving for California next week."

Well, stammered forth the husband, I can't

not see what harm there can be in that, for you know very well, that he has visited us off and on, for the last ten or twelve years."

Well, as to the visiting part of the matter, responded the old lady, that's all right and proper enough I suppose, but the idea of having Margaret walking up and down the streets with him, not only in the night time, but in the open day, is a piece of business which my feelings revolt against. And moreover, what will the neighbors say about it? I'll warrant you that it will be spread all about town in a few days."

What if it does mother? said Margaret, who had just commenced to wake up from the reverie, I am sure that Henry is a good fellow and bears an unsullied reputation, and—"

I am going to the store, interrupted her father, so you can fight your own battles, and he took his hat and cane, and off he went to attend to his urgent duties."

There was a pause of almost five minutes, after the husband had left the house for his store, and Ellen, who was a listener all the while, during the above personal conversation, thought now that it was her turn to speak; but she was at a loss to know how she could open her battery upon the enemy. At last, her mother once again renewed the conversation, and asked Ellen's opinion upon the matter."

Did you say that you wished to know my opinion, mother? asked Ellen earnestly.

Yes, Ellen, answered her mother.

Indeed, mother, to be candid with you, and to tell you the plain and honest truth I would not care a fig for what our neighbors would say about the matter, providing that Henry and Margaret love each other, and—"

Stop! stop! Ellen, no more; that will do. Love each other, indeed! Why, you are crazy, Ellen, to make use of such an expression, and to me, too. Have Margaret, my pet, marry a poor, wild, young mechanic, that has neither home nor money to support him."

But he has a good trade which is a fortune in itself, was Ellen's sensible reply, and here she gave her sister Margaret a light press on her foot, as much as to say, why don't you help me to fight Henry's battles, behind his back."

Margaret, however, said not a word, and left the battle between her mother and Ellen. Ellen seeing that her sister did not open her lips, could not very well control her ardent nature, and said—"

I thought you liked Henry, mother? I'm sure you did when he was an apprentice with father when we lived in South Boston."

Yes, I did like Henry then, but it is a good many years ago, was the mother's cold reply.

Why should a few years lessen him in your estimation, mother? Why, I remember well the time that Margaret and I used to throw Henry down on the shop floor and cover him with shavings. And father used to laugh at us, and—"

But you must know, that you were all children then, but now you are young ladies, and he is a man; and furthermore, we are very differently situated now, from what we were then. Are you not aware of that Ellen?"

Yes, mother, I'm aware of all that. But all the difference that I can see in us is this: that father used to work at his trade then, but now he has a grocery store, and I am sure—"

I want to wash up these breakfast things, interrupted her mother, and I wish to hear no more talk about the matter; so that ends the whole subject. And the way Mrs. Pierpont rattled the cups and saucers was a caution to her enemies."

Margaret and Ellen left the breakfast room without further ceremonies, and each went to their different duties, and so the subject was dropped for the present."

TO BE CONTINUED.

What Civility is Worth.

Civility costs nothing, and considering it pays its way so handsomely in all companies, to any nothing of occasional chance advantages, it is a marvel that it is not more common—that it is not a universal virtue."

Within a few years, a couple of gentlemen—one of whom was a foreigner—visited the various locomotive workshops of Philadelphia. They called at the most prominent one first, stated their wish, to look through the establishment, and make some inquiries of a more specific character. They were shown through the premises in a very indifferent manner, and no special pains were taken to give them any information beyond what their own inquiries drew forth. The same results followed their visits to the several larger establishments. By some just debts, they were induced to call on a relieved. Does or fourth-rate class of men to dampen the enterprising workmen and are striving to get ahead of the application of the community of which they are members? It certainly changes show, and a continuation frequently classes to swamp with bankruptcy."

The members of a community like this, who encourage transient merchants to come establishment, and of the very superior manner in which he could conduct his factory if additional facilities of capital were afforded him. The gentlemen left him, not only favorably impressed toward him, but with the feeling that he thoroughly understood his business.

Within a year he was surprised with an invitation to visit St. Petersburg. The result was, his locomotive establishment was removed there bodily. It was the agent of the Czar who had called on him, in company with an American citizen. He has recently returned, having accumulated a large fortune, and still receives from his Russian workshops about a hundred thousand dollars a year. He invests his money in real estate, and has already laid the foundation for the largest fortune of any private individual in Philadelphia, and all the result of civility to a couple of strangers.—Hall's Journal of Health.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, Jan. 2d, 1858.

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

ACCIDENT. Mr. James Shaw, while engaged in blasting in the Quarry of Messrs. Frederick & Field, yesterday morning, had his arm severely jammed by a piece of granite falling upon it. The injuries were dressed by Dr. Saville.

IMPROVE THE CHANCE. We learn that the reading of "The Acorn," a little semi-monthly conducted by the pupils of High School, will take place on Thursday afternoon next. The first number, which appeared a week or two since, was a rich treat, and gave much pleasure to a few of our citizens who were present.

NEW POST OFFICE REGULATIONS. We are glad to perceive that the careless manner of sending out mail bags without being checked, as has been the custom heretofore, has been remedied by the worthy Postmaster of Boston. Mr. Capen, has devised and put in operation a system by which every lock mail bag as it leaves the office is checked, and by which also every one is checked as it is received into the office. He has also adopted measures which insure the more safe transmission of the mails between the Post Office and the Depots; and he is now engaged in perfecting arrangements for the more safe transmission of the mails over the different routes throughout New England. Mr. Capen appears to have entered upon the duties of his office with a determination to render the Boston Post Office the model office for the country. For the improvements he has already adopted, and for those which he may yet adopt, he will receive the hearty thanks of the people.

CONVALESCENT. Our neighbor, Mr. Lombard, who has been confined to his house for some time past in consequence of a severe attack of rheumatic fever, we are happy to state has so far recovered as to be able to resume his business. In again entering upon the duties of his profession, he would take the opportunity of renewing his thanks to his friends and patrons, for their manifold favors, assuring them it will ever be his ambition to make if for their interest to continue the same. And in accordance with the custom to offer the congratulations of the season. Trusting, the new year may prove to them a prosperous one in all their worldly undertakings—happy in the full enjoyment of every social blessing.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL CLOTHING STORE. On reference to our advertising columns it will be seen that Messrs. Jackman & Merrill have entered into the Clothing business, at 29 and 30, Dock Square, Boston, where they are offering bargains, in every description of Clothing, meeting the attention of purchasers. The goods must be sold even at any sacrifice, as it is the stock of a bankrupt concern, and must be closed. Mr. Jackman was recently—if not still—a partner in the flourishing house of Jackman & Goodhue, Weymouth Landing. He carries with him to his new business, the best wishes of this community.

ATLANTIC MAGAZINE. The third number of this magazine has been politely furnished us by the enterprising publishers, Messrs. Sampson & Co. It is neatly got up, containing about one hundred and twenty-five octavo pages of closely printed matter, on various subjects. The article on the President's Message, we think a little too severe, and untempered rather too strongly with a peculiar bias to meet the views of the general reader. Still, we are told, in the editorial preface, that the "Atlantic," upon all subjects in reference to political and social matters which may come up for settlement, will be fearless and outspoken. If this principle is impartially adhered to, we see no reason why it should not succeed; it furnishes strong inducements to bring out such subjects as are of interest and wholesome criticism.

Three dollars a year, or twenty-five cents for a single number. To be had at the Boston, or at the

HARPER'S MAGAZINE FOR JANUARY. The January Number of this invaluable Magazine has been promptly received and well sustains its former reputation. Its general scope and character still remains unchanged. No family should be without it. Each number contains one hundred and forty-five pages of reading matter, comprising during the year, nearly two thousand octavo pages of the choicest miscellaneous literature of the day—embellished with numerous pictorial illustrations, plates of fashion etc., etc. Its monthly issue has already reached the unprecedented circulation of one hundred and seventy thousand copies, with a steady increase. No work of the kind published comes so strongly recommended to the public favor. It is a most suitable offering for a New Year's present.

It may be had by the year or single number, of A. Williams & Co., booksellers and publishers, 100 Washington street, Boston, special agents for Harper & Brother's publications, or at the bookstore of C. Gill & Co. Terms, three dollars a year, or twenty-five cents for single copies. Clubs furnished at a discount.

BALLOU'S PICTORIAL, or Lady's Parlor Companion, has reached an enviable rank in the peculiar niche which it fills in the literary world. Its merits have been duly appreciated by the community, receiving the most flattering success. The work for 1858 promises to be even more attractive than its predecessors. To be had at the bookstore of C. Gill & Co.

Protect the feet by buying from the complete and extra assortment offered by C. Gill & Co., a pair of children's misses' youths' boys' or men's best quality Rubber Boots. They have made reductions on some kinds, from their former advertised low prices. Give them a call.

Gill & Co.

Concert at Johnson's Hall
"MUSIC BATH CHAMBERS."

The Concert of the "Chorister's Class," given on Sunday evening last, passed off in a manner highly creditable to themselves and the gratification of a small but appreciating audience. One could scarcely realize while listening to Anthems and Chants so effectively rendered that the Class was composed of such youthful members.

Mr. Frothingham who has so kindly and liberally bestowed his time and talents toward cultivating in his young proteges a correct and refined musical taste, is deserving the highest encomiums for his untiring efforts. Those who had the pleasure of listening to their voices attuned to the sweetest harmony in "Praise to God," will, we think, join with us in admitting that they have rarely passed an evening in the enjoyment of music so chaste and effective in its style. As the Concert was in aid of the "Fragment Society," it is to be regretted that the citizens did not respond to the call in the cause of benevolence in a manner more in accordance with their usual spirit of liberality. A crowded house should have answered this appeal to the sympathies in behalf of the suffering poor.

A repetition of the Concert will be given on Sunday, (to-morrow) evening, for the benefit of one of the members of the class. The beneficiary is a son of the late George B. Nightingale. That he may with all others comprising the "Chorister's Class," be greeted with a full house to cheer and urge them on in attaining perfection in this beautiful science, is the ardent wish of many.

A happy New Year!

To our PATRONS. With this number we enter upon the twenty-second volume of the Patriot. Yes! twenty-two years ago, Anno Domini, 1837, we matured the plan, and started the experiment, of publishing in this town a weekly newspaper, neutral in its character, devoted to "Morals, Education, Agriculture and General Intelligence." It succeeded—triumphantly succeeded; thanks to those generous spirits, who, with open and sympathetic hearts, have ever been ready to sustain and cheer us on in our humble enterprise. Our object has been to please and serve the best interests of the community. In the assurance that our intentions have been taken in good part, we tender to our readers the compliments of the season.

A CARD.

The members of the Quincy Dancing School who attended the Exhibition of the Milton Railway School, on Monday evening last return their sincere thanks to Mr. Hollis, for the gentlemanly reception they received. Also, for the polite manner in which he showed them the door when they left. They would be very happy to return the compliment at their own Exhibition which takes place in a few weeks, where we should be glad to see him and his friends.

Those who were there.
Quincy, Jan. 2.

A CARD.
The undersigned thanks this method to express her unfeigned gratitude to many kind friends, for their benevolence and expressions of sympathy, and begs leave to offer the assurance that such acts of kindness will long be remembered by a bereaved family.
SARAH A. NIGHTINGALE.
Quincy, Dec. 31.

A CARD.
To those Ladies who presented us with the generous gift of nineteen dollars on Christmas eve; and, also those friends of whom we received a liberal token of their esteem, the sum of twenty dollars, on the 29th ult., we express our thanks and best wishes. May heaven bless and reward them.

Dear sister, mourn not for thy child,
For he has gone to a land of rest;
Although it is hard for you to bear,
Yet God doeth all things for the best.
Not long since thy dear father was laid
In the silent grave so low,
And now thy darling child is taken,
And another that soon must go.
But let us feel that God is gracious—
Let us love Him here below;
Soon He'll take us all to heaven,
Where tears no more do ever flow.

Poetry.

When is the Time to Die.

I asked the glad and happy child,
Whose hands were filled with flowers,
Whose silver laugh ran free and wild
Among the vine-crowned bowers;
I crossed her sunny path and cried,
When is the time to die?
Not yet! not yet! the child replied,
And swiftly bounded by.

I asked a maiden; back she threw,
The tresses of her hair;
Grief's traces o'er her cheeks I knew,
Like pearls that glistened there;
A flash passed o'er her lily brow,
I heard her spirit sigh:
Not now, she cried, Oh no! not now:
Youth's not the time to die!

I asked a mother as she pressed
Her first-born in her arms,
As gently on her tender breast
She hushed the babe's alarms;
In quivering tones her accents came,
Her eyes were dim with tears:
My boy his mother's life must claim,
For many, many years.

I questioned one in manhood's prime,
Of proud and fearless air;
His brow was furrowed not by time,
Or dimmed with woe or care.
In angry accents he replied,
And flashed with scorn his eye:
Talk not to me of death, he cried,
For only age should die.

I questioned age; for him the tomb
Had long been all prepared;
But death with years youth and bloom,
This man of years had spared.
Once more is nature's dying fire
Flashed high, and thus he cried:
Life! only life, is my desire!
Then gasped, and groaned, and died.

I asked a Christian—never thou
When is the hour of death?
A holy calm was on his brow,
And peaceful was his breath;
And sweetly o'er his features stole
A smile, a light divine;
He spake the language of his soul—
My Master's time is mine!

The Family Man.

BY JOHN G. SAGE.

I once was a jolly young man,
And knew how to pick up a fun,
But I've done with all that you must know,
For now I'm a family man.

When a "partner" I ventured to take,
The ladies all favored the plan;
They vowed I was certain to make Such an excellent family man.

If I travel by land or by water,
I have charge of one Susan or Ann;
Mrs. Jones is sure that her daughter
Is safe with a family man!

The trunks and boxes round 'em,
With something like "honey I sent,"
But though I mutter—"Confound 'em,
I smile—like a family man!

I was once as gay as a templer,
But levity's now under ban;
Young people must have an exemplar,
And I am a family man.

The club men I meet in the city
All treat me as well as they can;
And only exclaim—"what a pity
Poor Tom is a family man!

I own I am getting quite pensive;
Ten children, from David to Dan—
Is a family rather expensive;
But then—I'm a family man!

Faith.

That which thou with truckling spirit,
Bending to the crowd shall say,
Dust and darkness shall inherit,
Time shall hurl like chaff away—
But the silent, earnest thought,
To thine immortal nature taught,
Shall not fade away to naught.

Longings in deep anguish working,
Powers like sudden flames I start,
And though baffled, still start lurking,
Are the seedlings unto art:
Thence uprisings its glorious flower
In its well appointed hour,
And to heaven itself doth tower.

Anecdotes.

A merchant entered his store in the morning, and found his boy Bobby attempting to throw all kinds of somersets.

What are you about? asked the merchant,
looking astonished at the evolutions of the boy.

"Obbliged my girl," replied the almost exhausted youth. "She's writ me a letter, and at the bottom of the page she said—turn over and oblige, and I've been going it for more'n half an hour."

"Pa, didn't you whip me for biting Tommy? Yes, my child; for you hurt him very much."

Well, then, pa, you ought to whip mamma's music teacher, too—for he bit her, yesterday, right in the mouth; and I know it, because she put her arms around his neck, and tried to choke him."

"Well, my little son, ain't you lost? Little boy, stepping back, and eyeing the stranger, said—

"Look here, mister, don't be so familiar if you please, I am not unprotected, laying his hand on a revolver; you must remember I am a gentleman."

"George, you are looking very smiling. What has happened?"

"The most delightful thing. I caught my Jenny by surprise, this morning, in her wrapper, and without hoops; and I got the first I've had since whalebone skirts came in."

"What's the first sight of a lo—"

"Brooklyn N. Y. only a steam—"

Pure Potash

IN TIN CANS.

B. T. BABBITT,

68 & 70 Washington street, N. Y.,

And 38 India street, Boston.

THE Proprietor of this POTASH has for many years seen the necessity of having some reliable standard for the strength of POT-

ASH. The adulteration has become so general,

that it has, notwithstanding its valuable properties, gone nearly out of use. The Proprietor has taken the responsibility of subscribing his name

to every package, and warrants the strength to

be uniform, and when used always producing the same results. Potash many times is adulter-

ed with salt, which is destructive in making soap;

it makes the Ladies say they did not have good luck, &c. One other reason that Potash has gone out of use, is, it is so unpleasant to handle,

being put in wooden casks, and becoming in many cases, and very troublesome to the retailers.

Now the Proprietor first obtains pure Potashes,

always being the same strength, and producing

the same results; and will warrant it in all cases,

if the directions are followed, to produce double the effect in making soaps, and all other purposes for which Potash is used, with full directions for making the best of Soft, Hard, or Fancy

Soaps. It is made with little trouble; the ley is all prepared in five or ten minutes.

1 lb. Potash warranted to cut 5 lbs. of grease into soap.

12 lbs. will make one barrel of beautiful soap.

Full directions for making soft soap

Directions for making hard soap.

Directions for Laundries and Hotels.

Directions for cleaning cotton waste that has been used for cleaning machinery of all kinds.

Directions for using this Potash in place of Sul Soda.

Directions for sticking India-rubber soles on Shoes.

All the above directions accompany the can.

COMPLETE

Dental Establishment.

DRS. CUMMINGS & FLAGG,
SURGEON DENTISTS,
25 Tremont Street, (up stairs,) Boston.

DRS. C. & F., having had extensive experience in every branch of practical and scientific Dentistry, and being conversant with the best known methods and latest improvements in the profession, feel qualified to perform all operations in a manner highly satisfactory to patients, and reflecting credit upon themselves.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH. By the improved principle of Atmospheric Pressure, teeth, from one to an entire set, are inserted firmly and beautifully, without the use of springs or clasps. Many beautiful specimens of Plate work, on gold, silver and platinum, are on exhibition at our Rooms, which, for taste, style and durability, we believe cannot be surpassed.

EXTRACTING TEETH. In this important and difficult branch of the profession, great care is taken to render the operation the least painful. By the application of a benumbing agent to the gum, the operation is performed with comparatively little pain. This new process of extracting teeth has been in use nearly two years, and we feel confident in recommending it to our patrons and the public, as lessening in a great measure the dread which has heretofore existed, of dental operations. In some cases it entirely removes pain, while in almost all instances, it does much to contribute to the comfort of our patients. The application of ether, which is entirely painless, is administered to those who desire it.

FILLING TEETH. This is the most difficult operation the dental practitioner is ever called upon to perform. It often times baffles the skill of operators who have been in practice many years. It is also, when well performed, the most certain and the most reliable that can be applied for the cure of decayed teeth. But, to be effective, it must be executed in the most thorough and perfect manner. The preservation of a tooth, when well filled, and with suitable material, if it be afterwards kept constantly clean, may be regarded as certain. At any rate, it will never again be attacked in the same place by disease.

By the use of the new preparation of Crystallized Gold, teeth are not only protected from decay, and partially saved, but verily restored to the form, comfort and utility of the original structure. By a wonderful property of gold, the metal, in its crystalline or porous state, by peculiar manipulation, passes from a pulvulent to a cohesive and solid mass, the same as coin. By virtue of this remarkable property, it is made to fill the cavity of a tooth, and even to restore its shape, as substantially as if it were cast.

The proprietors of this complete dental establishment will always be pleased to give their advice on the care and preservation of the teeth of children and adults, and the results of their long experience in cases requiring the opinion of practical scientific dentists.

A Sermon

Preached in Quincy, Dec. 27th, 1857, relating to the last public services performed by the late Dr. Lunt; together with some notice of the mural tablet just erected in the First Church.

BY CHARLES BROOKS, OF MEDFORD.

JOHN, VII. 37. The Last Day.

This text is connected with a most interesting moment in our Saviour's ministry. The record is as follows:—"In the last day, the great day of the feast, Jesus stood and cried, saying, 'If any man thirst let him come unto me and drink.'"

The divine Saviour had just been speaking of his going away. "Yet a little while am I with you, and then I go unto Him who sent me. Ye shall seek me and shall not find me, and where I am thither ye cannot come."

These thoughts of his departure occupied his mind on that last Sabbath, when he was giving to his disciples his parting counsel and benediction.

"In the last day," says the text. O! how much is included in those words, the last day! We are now in the last week of another year; and the last day of that year will in a few hours, be upon us. Of what will it remind us, and what should it do for us? How rapidly the years glide away! Time hastens by us with a lapse so noiseless, that we seldom notice the vibration of its wings; and yet how inexorably it hurries us to our graves! No one can arrest it; no one can recall it. Deaf to all the prayers of faith, to all the entreaties of affection, to all the sorrows of repentance, each moment speaks to us but once, then turns its back upon us and passes away forever. If our opportunities are flying so swiftly, so irretrievably, and if the record which these messenger moments make of us cannot be blotted out, what manner of persons ought we to be? If we value the pleasures of memory should we not keep an eye upon those eternal lines the recording angel is writing concerning us?

While the closing year should lead us to serious recollection of our doings, to faithful self-scrutiny, to sincere repentance, to new resolutions and to future obedience, it brings to most of us, to-day, the remembrance of departed friends. Among them was that beloved friend and pastor, who stood in this desk one year ago; and on the last Sabbath of the year, gave you his parting counsel and bade you his affectionate farewell. Able penman mine have done beautiful justice to his varied talents, his large scholarship, his classic taste, his glowing eloquence and his deep affections. You need not be told how richly he divided the word of truth, and how fearless he was in the cause of Christ and of God. With a name, every year extending itself, he presided over this church with discretion; he defended its faith with power, and recommended to it a Christian morality by example. With a retiring pensiveness of manner, which was sometimes mistaken for unconcern, he preferred the quiet fields of thought to the dusty highways of trade; and would open his soul to a friend at home as he could not in the crowd. We may say with truth, that time does not lessen our estimate of his worth; but, on the contrary, we feel every Sunday the improbability of making his place good at this altar of God. He sleeps in Jesus, and it is well.

"When coldness wraps this suffering clay,
Ah, whither strays the immortal mind?
It cannot die, it cannot stay,
But leaves its darkened dust behind."

Above or Love, Hope, Hate or Fear,
It lives all passionless and pure;
An age shall fleet like earthly year;
Its years as moments shall endure.

Away, away, without a wing,
O'er all, thro' all, its thoughts shall fly
A nameless and eternal thing,
Forgetting what it was to die."

Another poet has most truly said:—

How beautiful is genius when combined
With holiness. Oh, how divinely sweet
The tones of earthly harp, whose cords are touched
By the soft hand of Poetry, and hung
Upon Religion's shrine, there vibrating
With solemn music in the ear of God."

Let us make our departed friend and teacher still live with us, by calling to mind his faithful exhortations, and by following his example in the footsteps of Christ.

Peace to thy pensive shade; and welcome rest;
Bless'd in thy genius; in thy love, how bless'd!
And bless'd that heaven-bound from our scene removed.

Thy soul enjoys the Saviour whom it loved.

It is honorable to this Christian congregation, that you are moved with a desire to have in your house of worship a memorial of him who here led in your Sabbath devotions. In thus honoring his memory you honor yourselves. You desire to have a more permanent record, than one generation can keep, of the talents and character of your favorite preacher, and your faithful friend. As the mural tablet, commemorative of his graces and worth, appears to-day, for the first time, upon the walls of this church, and on the anniversary of the last day of his public ministrations at this altar, I know you will bear with me while I say something of such mementoes of commemoration, and close with a few words concerning this conch; whose value and significance are heightened by the fact, that it was first thought of and then purchased by the ladies of this parish.

There is, in human nature, something instinctive leading us to perpetuate the record of human excellence. We would thus transmit to coming generations our appreciation of modest virtue and noble achievement, of self-sacrificing philanthropy and exalted patriotism; and this is done in the poet's elegy, the orator's oration, the architect's temple and the sculptor's marble. The monuments reared in honor of distinguished individuals, in ancient times, were costly tombs, sepulchral obelisks and historic columns. The most ancient are the pyramids of Egypt, and the tombs of the Persian kings at Persepolis. In more poetic Greece the habit of erecting statues and trophies became so strong, that on the isthmus of Corinth, near the temple of Neptune, were statues of the victors in the Isthmian games; and in the holy grove of Altis similar ones of the conquerors in the Olympic games. Even trophies of brass were used for commemoration, and none of them have come down to our day.

The Romans adopted these natural customs of the Greeks; but introduced one entirely new monument, the triumphal arch. In Rome the traveller now sees the most splendid specimens of this species of architecture. Two of them refer to religious history. The arch of Titus, reared to commemorate the emperor's destruction of Jerusalem; and the arch of Constantine, built to record his conversion to Christianity.

Artemesia, queen of Caria, erected at Halicarnassus, a temple in honor of her husband, Mausolus. It was so large and costly as to be called one of the seven wonders of the world; and has since given the name of "mausoleums" to expensive sepulchres.

Modern Europe, and our own country, present many pleasing specimens of similar structures commemorating national events and individual character. Our rural cemeteries, while they seem to take from death its dreariness and solitude, are grateful proofs of our veneration for departed worth. But the holiest of all, is when the consecrated temple of the Most High is selected to contain these records of our gratitude and these proofs of our love. To have a portion of the house of God thus set apart forever to this commemorative service has been deemed in all countries and ages the highest of monumental tributes. Two churches in Europe seem to have been almost wholly devoted to guarding the dust and declaring the virtues of illustrious benefactors of mankind. The eldest is the Sante Croce, (the church of the holy cross), at Florence, in Italy; the other is Westminster Abbey, in London. As you walk with a quickened memory and a reverent heart among these tombs of godlike men, a hundred voices seem to speak to you out of the deep silence, commanding you to become all that God has enabled you to be; and entreating you to lead where any dare to follow.

A sentiment and an influence, akin to these, will be awakened and felt by many who come to read the mural tablets in this house of prayer. How emphatically and nobly will these two, on the right and left of this desk, speak to all true patriots through coming generations! And how gently but strongly will the one, just erected, call every one here to repentance, holiness and devotion! You have here beautifully associated your late Minister with those two illustrious patriots, who were like him, professors of the same simple and sublime faith; and who are, we trust, now enjoying with him the same heavenly communion.

The cenotaph, in its outward aspect, has the form and decoration which we should expect from the good sense and pure taste of the three gentlemen who procured it; but of its inscription, how can I satisfy it only speak? To be described, it must be read. Will you allow me the privilege of thus describing it?

EVEN SO SAITH THE SPIRIT.

For they rest.

Written as this was by that accomplished Christian scholar, Dr. Frothingham, he has condensed into that record as much truthful strength and classic grace as could any other man in our country.

My Christian friends,—in making this tablet permanent in your walls, you have done a good to yourselves. It will be felt by you to be as the presence of a near friend, the heart of a constant well-wisher, the voice of an able teacher and the strength of a valiant Christian. By this event you seem to have established his permanent ministry among you, and you can imagine him here to witness your devotions and to help you in your spiritual advancement.

You have also done a good to your children. As they read that just and beautiful record of fidelity and faith, they will be moved to wish that their lives may be thus worthy of human esteem, and their deaths be thus filled with the Gospel's hope.

You have also done a good to the cause of Christ. You have thus published your profession of faith; and on that wall you have set your undecaying seal to the rational Christianity which your Teacher so firmly believed and so eloquently preached.

You have also done a good to the clerical profession. By this act you have honored the clergy in the view of others; and assigned to the accomplished scholar and devoted minister his true rank among the benefactors of the world.

And now Christian friends, as this last Sabbath of the year has called up within us so many tender memories, and been made doubly consecrate in our hearts by the events we have reviewed; what should the pulpit do, but repeat, with all the solemnity of the unseen world, the sacred and compassionate invitation of Jesus:—"If any man thirst let him come unto me and drink." Jesus stood in the midst of that vast assembly, on the last day of the feast, and uttered these words:—to-day, yes, to-day he stands in the midst of each one of your hearts; and he says to you:—"If you are spiritually thirsty, come unto me, and I will give you the waters of life; if you are spiritually hungry, come unto me, and I will give you the bread that comes down from heaven; if you are in spiritual sickness come unto me, and I will be your heavenly physician; if you are in the prison of sin, come unto me, and I will visit you with the liberty of the sons of God; and if you are naked, come unto me, and I will clothe you with the garments of salvation. To-day Jesus is 'coming to his own,' and will you let him complain, that his own will receive him not? Open wide the doors of your hearts to your loving Saviour, your merciful Redeemer, and so receive him that he shall take up his abode with you, never, never more to depart.

Reminded, as at this hour we are, of the speed of our years, it is fitting to say here, that there is something superior to all earthly objects, something more durable than all earthly monuments. It is character,—pure, magnanimous, heroic, Christlike character. This shall stand, all halos with light, when the fires of the firmament shall have faded; this shall remain graven, in the memory of God, when earth's splendid mansoleums shall have crumbled into dust. Character therefore, character it is that we must make and keep. Whatever else you neglect, neglect not this; for it is character which will outlast the stars, which will bring you to the reception of all truth, unite you to the holy and pious of all ages and all worlds, and happier yet, make you forever one with Christ, as he is one with God.

The sculptured marble may dissolve in dust, And earthly fame and power may pass away; Not so the triumphs of the wise and just, They hold the glories of eternal day.

Spared to see the last Sabbath of another year and to meet at this time in this house

let me, while I call you to severe self-examination and devout prayer, let me say, that one thing only can fit you for life and prepare you for death. It is a likeness to the Lord Jesus Christ. This only can fit you for heaven; and that which fits you for heaven is the only thing that fits you for death.

If this be the last year that any of you are to see on earth, God grant that you may have the lamp of religion within you trimmed and burning; willing and ready whenever your Lord shall come. Trust therefore in God; trust in his holy spirit; trust in his sanctifying grace; and if like your departed friend, you are called to tread the desert, trust, as he did, that God will go with you; that in the dew of evening he will give you bread, and from the stony rock he will give you water; that his cloud of mercy will overshadow you by day and his pillar of fire will guide you by night, till he conducts you safely through the wilderness of human life, to the promised rest of Heaven. Ever so, saith the Spirit: FOR THEY REST.

Learn all you can.

Never omit any opportunity to learn all you can. Sir Walter Scott said that, even in a stage coach, he always found somebody who could tell him something he did not know before. Conversation is frequently more useful than books for purposes of knowledge. It is, therefore, a mistake to be morose and silent among persons whom you think ignorant, for a little sociability on your part will draw them out, and they will be able to teach you something, no matter how ordinary their employment.

Indeed, some of the most sagacious remarks are made by persons of this description, respecting their particular pursuits.—Hugh Miller, the Scotch geologist, owes not a little of his fame to observations made when he was a journeyman stone mason, and worked in a quarry. Socrates well said that there was but one good, which is knowledge, and one evil, which is ignorance. Every grain of sand goes to make the heap. A gold digger takes the smallest nuggets, and is not fussy enough to throw them away because he hopes to find a large lump sometime. So in acquiring knowledge, we should never despise an opportunity, however unpromising.

If there is a moment's leisure, spend it either in good or instructive talking with the first you meet.

The Horse Shoe.

A good countryman was taking a rural walk with his son Thomas. As they walked slowly along, the father suddenly stopped. "Look!" he said, there's a bit of iron—a piece of a horse shoe; pick it up and put it in your pocket."

"Poh!" answered the child, "it's not worth stooping for."

The father without uttering a word, picked up the iron, and put it in his pocket.

When they came to the village, he entered the blacksmith's shop, and sold it for three farthings, and with that sum he bought some cherries. Then father and son set off again on their ramble. The sun was burning hot, and neither a house, tree, nor fountain of water was in sight. Thomas soon complained of being tired, and had some difficulty in following his father, who walked on with a firm step. Perceiving that his boy was tired, the father let fall a cherry, as if by accident.

Thomas stooped, and quickly picked it up, and devoured it. A little further, he dropped another, and the boy picked it up as eagerly as ever; and thus they continued, the father dropping the fruit, and the son picking them up. When the last one was eaten, the father stopped, and turning to the boy, said:

"Look, my son! If you had chosen to stoop once, and pick up a piece of horse-shoe, you would not have been obliged at last to stoop so often to pick up the cherries."

The Daintiness of Great Men.

Descartes, the famous mathematician and philosopher! La Fontaine, celebrated for his witty fables; Buffon, the great naturalist, were all singularly deficient in the powers of conversation. Marmontel, the novelist, was so dull in society that his friend said of him, after an interview, "I must go and read his tales, to recompense myself for the weariness of hearing him." As to Corneille, the greatest dramatist in France, he was completely lost in society—so absent and embarrassed, that he wrote of himself a witty couplet, importing that he never was intelligible but through the mouth of another. With an appet seems to be something widely different from that play of words in conversation, which, while it sparkles, dies: for Charles II. the witest monarch that ever sat on the English throne, was so charmed with the humor of "Hudibras," that he caused himself to be introduced, in the character of a private gentleman, to Butler, its author.

The witty king found the author a very dull companion, and was of opinion, with many others, that so stupid a fellow could never have written so clever a book. Addison, whose classic elegance has long been considered the model of style, was shy and absent in society, preserving, even before a single stranger, stiff and dignified silence; in conversation, Dante was taciturn and satirical. Gray of Alford, seldom talked or smiled. Rousseau was remarkably trite in conversation; not a word of fancy or eloquent warmed him; Milton was uncouth, when much pressed by talk of others.

The Search Warrant

There lived many years ago, a wicked wight whose name was Joe. Though very poor he eschewed labor, and lived by filching from his neighbors. At least his neighbors always thought—though at it he never was caught—he'd take, if he could get a chance, whatever fell beneath his glance; and when a farmer missed a hoe or an axe, 'twas laid to Joe. In fact they made him, with impunity, a scape-goat for the whole community.

In the same neighborhood there dwelt an old Dutch farmer, named Van Pelt, whose wealth enabled him to keep large herds of cattle and sheep, and often he boasted of the latter; no sheep that his were ever fatter. Our worthy farmer, though no glutton was partial to fat chops of mutton. One day he labored hard and long, and like the nightingale in song began to feel, as well he might, the keen demands of appetite—he'd eaten nought from morn till night, and being forth he thought to slay his fattest sheep without delay. He reached the field which he supposed all safe and snug his flocks inclosed; but though the rest were on the ground, the fattest one could not be found. The field produced of grass and clover in full supply: it was moreover encircled in a high rail fence—too high for sheep to scale—and hence he argued, "there can be no doubt some hungry thief has been about. Each circumstance proclaimed it so, and who would steal a sheep but Joe? 'Twas he I'm sure, I'll bet my life on't," and he went home and told his wife on't.

Next day he to the squire repaired, and with a solemn oath declared his full belief that Joe had got the sheep concealed about his cot. "To prove his guilt, dear sir, I wish you would instantly a warrant issue; and the constable and I together will search Joe's cot for my wether." The magistrate at once complied, and with the catchpole at his side, Van Pelt set forth. They reached the spot, a tiny looking rough built cot, and rudely entered without knocking. Joe's wife sat darning an old stocking, her feet the meanwhile the cradle rocking. The officer in a stately tone made at once his business known.

With much surprise the woman listened, while in her eye a tear-drop glistened. Her pride was touched, her color rose, carnation tinged her cheek and nose, as she expressed in tones of thunder her indignation and her wonder. "It is to search my house then, is it, that I am indebted for this visit? You choose your own time to come, I'm very sure you wouldn't venture with such intent the house to enter. He stole a sheep? he'd scorn to do it, and if you told him so you'd rue it. But if you can't be satisfied until you've rummaged far and wide, proceed at once, as quick as may be, and don't wake up my poor sick baby." Then came a flood of tears; and then, more reconciled, she sang, or rather sobbed a ditty to her child.

Woman's threats are vain; her tears have potency to move the spheres. So thought Van Pelt, whose heart was pained so see them flow all unrestrained. To leave him comrade in the lurch alone to prosecute the search, strongly at first he felt inclined. He soon, however, changed his mind, concluding it would be better to guard the lady, and not let her be by the constable abused, who he thought to such scenes more used, seemed with her grief assuaged.

Around they began to pry, searching the house with careful eye. The pantry first, turning the button, they looked within but found no mutton; the cellar, garret, hall, bed-room, wood-shed, oven and all. They searched, however, proved in vain, and they retraced their steps again, sure that the place did not contain the missing sheep alive or slain.

With head thrust through a broken light, the woman watched them out of sight. Then stepping to the cradle, took, and straightway hung upon a hook, a well dressed sheep as fat and fide as ever tempted man to dine.

Joe soon came in and she related how nicely she the men had cheated; how, when she saw their steps directed towards the house, their plans suspected; so, running to the pantry shelf where Joe had put the meat himself—for he that night before had taken it and lugged it home and slyly slain

it—she clapped a night cap on the sheep, and laid it down as if to sleep within the cradle, where its form she covered up to keep it warm, and rocked and sang to keep it quiet, supposing they would not come nigh it.

This did Joe's tenderness awaken; she'd saved his mutton and his bacon! and proved herself quite meet, for one who stole the food he'd eat. So up she stepped and fondly kissed her, until she thought he'd raise a blister, and praised her as the best receipt he'd ever found to keep fresh meat.

Live within your Means.

Next to the slavery of intemperance, what slavery on earth is more galling than that of poverty and indebtedness? The man who is everybody's debtor is everybody's slave, and in a much worse condition than he who serves a single master.

For the sake of the present, then, as well as for the sake of the future, we would most certainly urge upon every working man and boy to live within his means. Let him lay by something every day; if it be but a penny, be it a penny; it is better than nothing; infinitely better than running in debt a penny a day or a penny a week. If he can earn a dollar, let him try fairly and faithfully the experiment of living on ninety cents. He will like it.

"People will laugh." Let them laugh. "They will call me stingy." Better call you stingy than say you do not pay your debts. "They will wonder why I don't have better furniture, live in a finer house, and attend concerts and the playhouse." Let them wonder for a while; it will hurt them, and it certainly won't you. By-and-by you can have a finer house and finer furniture of your own, and they will wonder again, and come billing and cooing around you like so many pleased fools. Try the experiment. Live within your means.

Manufacture of Thimbles

Notwithstanding the facility with which the manufacture of these small but essential implements is carried on by means of moulds in the stamping machine, few processes can compare, in ingenuity and effective adaptation, with the contrivance originated by M. M. Roux & Bethier, of Paris. Sheet iron, one twenty-fourth of an inch thick, is cut into strips of dimensions suited to the intended size of the thimbles. These strips are passed under a punch press, whereby they are cut into disks of about two inches tugged together by a tail. Each step contains one dozen of these blanks, and these are made red hot, and laid upon a mandrel nicely fitted to their size. The workmen now strikes the middle of each with a round faced punch, about the thickness of his finger, and thus sinks into the concavity of the first mandrel. It is then transferred successively to another mandrel, which has five hollows of successively increasing depth, and by striking it into them, it is brought to the proper shape. This rude thimble is then stuck into the chuck of a lathe in order to polish it within; it is then turned outside, the circle marked for the gold ornament, and the pits indented with a milling tool. They are next annealed, brightened—gilded inside, with a very thin cone of gold leaf, which is firmly united to the surface of the iron by the strong pressure of a smooth steel mandrel. A gold fillet is applied to the outside, in an annular space turned to receive it, being fixed, by pressure at the edges, into a minute groove formed on the lathe.—North American.

Encourage your own Citizens

The editor of the Gloucester Telegraph, has an article in which the following sound policy is laid down, with regard to patronizing travelling dealers in dry goods. Every year our city traders suffer from this class of dealers, and we ask our readers to read and carefully to consider whether sound policy does not dictate that our dealers should be patronized whenever it is possible to do so.

into their midst, always hurt themselves more than they gain, in the long run. They may, perhaps, occasionally get a good bargain—get some article a dollar or two cheaper than at the regular store; but their course discourages the regular store-keeper, cramps him in his means, and deters him from enlarging his assortment. Then, perhaps those very ones who have patronized strangers from abroad, may be in immediate want of a particular article when no stranger is near, and which the permanent merchant has had no encouragement to keep on hand; and accordingly he is obliged to go or send to some neighboring city to procure the article, at an expense sometimes double and treble what he has gained in his bargain with the transient merchant.

Another view of the matter is the effect such things have upon the community generally. If you cramp your own merchant you cramp the spirit of enterprise that is always manifesting itself where business men are prosperous. Where such is the case among those doing the business of the place, the effect is always felt by remote members of the same community, and in like proportions.

We would urge upon our readers to think of these things; see what the effect will be and always do that which will be for "the greatest good to the greatest number." Encourage fair competition, but always do justice to our neighbors, bearing in mind that where such is done, prosperity and success will follow.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, Jan. 9th, 1858.

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

THE HOOK AND LADDER COMPANY held their monthly meeting on Monday evening last. They opened the "New Year" in fine style. A large company was in attendance including many invited guests. The worthy Captain done the courtesies of the evening, highly creditable to himself and satisfactory to his visitors. None were neglected. All were made welcome to partake of the good cheer which had been bountifully provided for the occasion. Around the festive board on the first floor, were seated as happy a set of faces as we ever beheld, discussing, with an earnestness not to be mistaken, the merits of a most delicious Chowder. In their neat and convenient hall over head, Uncle Glover had taken his position, with his favorite instrument in hand, discoursing sweet strains of music to a select party, who had led off to its inspiring tones in an animated dance. Much grace and science was displayed, especially in one instance, whose name we think deserves to be enclosed in [brackets]. In the early part of the evening Col. W. was called to mount the ladder, who occupied about thirty minutes in an extempore speech, sparkling with wit, which put his audience in the best of humor. We noticed more than one of our municipal fathers present, who looked on with an approving smile, — with hearts swelling with pride, at the scene before them. It is a monthly recreation, — a tonic and salutary in its influence, — an agreeable pastime for social intercourse and to shake off the ennui of the season.

CHOICE OF OFFICERS. At the semi-annual meeting of the Adams Literary Society the following individuals were elected to office:

President, John Hardwick.
Vice President, Joseph Morton.
Secretary, Joseph Bowditch.
Librarian, George Barker.
Treasurer, Jonathan Jackson.
Directors, C. Marsh, Charles Porter, Henry Lunt, Peter B. Turner, Uriah Joseph.
Trustees, J. Mayhew Marsh, George Cahill, Urbane Cudworth, Edward Brackett, Francis M. Johnson.

LYCEUM INSTITUTE. We are pleased to learn that the managers of this Institution, have succeeded, although at considerable expense, in securing the services of Mrs. Barrows, for the evening of the 21st. The fame of this lady for her critical taste and correct readings of some of the best English authors, is too well known to acquire any additional credit from our faint praise. Mrs. B. came to us highly recommended from the Old World, as an actress in the wide and varied field of the drama of unsurpassed powers. Her engagement at some of our most popular theatres, has well sustained that reputation. She is a lady of the most finished education, of high moral character, and dramatic talent of the first order. We bespeak for our citizens on this occasion, a rich intellectual treat.

PRESERVE YOUR HEALTH. The first step towards this desirable result, is to cleanse the blood from all impurities arising from the derangement of the digestive organs, sedentary habits, bad or confined air, etc., etc. Dr. Newcomb has compounded an article, known as the "Sarsaparilla Extract," which meets this complaint exactly. Try it, it is simple and effective.

SALE OF MILLINERY. Don't forget the enterprising Ambrotype man at his Salon this day.

TO READERS. In order to publish the New Year's sermon of the Rev. Charles Brooks, which will be found on the first page of to-day's paper we have been obliged to delay the continuance of the original story, "The Returned Gold Hunter," until the 23d instant. The sermon of Mr. Brooks will be found exceedingly interesting, and a rare treat to our readers, many of whom are well acquainted with the learned and Christian author, and who sympathetically respond to the main theme of his appropriate discourse.

MEETING AND ORGANIZATION OF THE MASSACHUSETTS LEGISLATURE. The Massachusetts Legislature met at the State House on Wednesday last. The Republican party having a decided predominance in both branches, elected their officers without difficulty. In the Senate, Mr. Charles W. Upham, of Essex, was re-elected President, and Stephen N. Gifford was re-elected Clerk.

In the House, Julius Rockwell, of Pittsfield, was elected Speaker, and Wm. Stowe re-elected Clerk. The Message of the Governor was delivered on Thursday; it occupies about two columns of the Herald. Quite readable as to its length.

SOUTH SHORE RAILROAD. The annual meeting of the stockholders of this road was held at the office of the Treasurer, on the 26th ult., when the old board of Directors was re-elected, as follows:—William Humphrey, John W. Loud, Joseph Loud, Jr., Elliot L. White, Laban Souther, James C. Dostie, William Sobier. At a subsequent meeting of the Directors, William Humphrey was re-elected President and John W. Loud, Clerk. The total receipts for the year were $43,923.11; expenditures, $26,289.47; net receipts, $17,633.64.

THE BALL ON NEW YEAR'S EVE, at the Hancock House, was very fashionably attended by many of the elite and substantial portion of our citizens. About fifty couples were present, forming an agreeable party as have honored that popular resort for many a day. The arrangements were excellent, the supper and etceteras, ditto, and the greatest amount of real, social comfort, appeared to be crowded into the few fleeting hours consecrated to the observance of the old year and the advent of the new.

We must not forget in this brief notice the gentlemanly clerk of the house; who is ever prompt in his duty, and assiduous in his endeavors to please.

A RARE OPPORTUNITY TO THOSE IN WANT OF CHEAP, GOOD, AND FASHIONABLE CLOTHING. We would recommend all of our friends and patrons to bear in mind the unusual advantages now offered in the sale of the immense "Bankrupt Stock of Clothing," 29 and 30 Dock Square, Boston. From observation, we have the best assurance that the fabrics and styles are of the latest and the most desirable character, and the prices are lower than the most sanguine could anticipate.

Messrs. Jackson & Merrill superintend the sale.

Summary of Intelligence.

Returns from sixteen counties in Oregon give 3,826 majority for the Constitution, and 5,019 majority against slavery. The vote on question of free negroes, in ten counties, is given, and was 650 for and 5,379 against them.

Jonathan Wales, Esq., of Randolph, Republican Representative, places his winter's earnings in the Legislature in the hands of a committee of three, who are to dispose of the same to meet the wants of the poor in that town.

Married couples resemble a pair of shears so says Sidney Smith, so joined that they cannot be separated, often moving in opposite directions, yet always pushing any one who comes between them.

THE BOSTON DAILY LEDGER
FOR THE YEAR 1858.

A Handsome Penny Paper.

THE Proprietors of the Boston Daily Ledger, grateful to the public for their generous patronage during the past year, desire to set forth briefly the object and aims of the paper, and solicit a continuance of popular partiality. The Daily Ledger has now been in the control of its present proprietors for one year, and during that time it has made its own way among readers everywhere with astonishing rapidity. In entering upon the new year, therefore, the proprietors feel increased encouragement to offer it as a medium of intelligence to the reading public, and a first-class channel for advertising to men of business generally.

The DAILY LEDGER professes to be an Independent Democratic Penny Paper, devoted to the defense and dissemination of sound Democratic principles, and the fearless advocacy of the rights of

THE PEOPLE.
It is published every day, (Sundays excepted,) morning and evening.

(FIVE EDITIONS DAILY.)
On clean, white paper, and with new, clear type. It is the determination of the proprietors, that in the collection of News, and the discussion of all the current Topics and great

ISSUES OF THE TIMES,
it shall be surpassed by no other paper of similar pretensions in New England. It aims to be both fearless and just; and while it opens its columns to communications from honest and thoughtful men of all parties and persuasions, it will continue to advocate, as it has done heretofore, the GREAT AND LASTING INTERESTS OF THE PEOPLE with all its ability.

It is governed by no clique or faction, and advises the laboring class to read them, and they will then see the cause of the present crisis

Jan 2. 3w

From the Stars and Stripes, Manchester (NH) is brought into requisition.

From the Fireman's Journal.

ly believe to be RIGHT, uninfluenced by the fear or favor of any man, or class of men.

The proprietors are happy to announce that during the past year, the DAILY LEDGER has established itself on an

UNSHAKEN FOUNDATION, and achieved

A SOLID POPULARITY,
which places it beyond the reach of change. Its Editorials are lively, spirited, and direct, while they are likewise pleasant and genial; its compilation of News is careful and exact; its issues are frequent and regular; and its mechanical appearance is far superior to that of any other Penny Paper.

In New England
—OR—
THE UNITED STATES.

Every department of the paper is occupied by gentlemen of the highest capacity in their profession, who will continue in the positions for which the popular verdict has pronounced them so well fitted. No pains or expense will be spared to secure the

EARLIEST INTELLIGENCE from all quarters, and to make it the Leading Democratic Paper in NEW ENGLAND!!

JOHN M. BARNARD, Esq., for many years the proprietor of the BOSTON HERALD, has been intimately connected with the management of the Daily Ledger, and will give it the benefit of his judgment and experience and assistance for the coming year.

Poetry.

[By request.]
Feast of Belshazzar.

The following stanzas are part of a poem of about one hundred lines, which was improvised by Mr. Whiting, a Trans Medium, at the Melodeon, on Sunday, Dec. 6th, 1857.

The pompous King at his table sat,
With nobles and courtiers around;
He quaffed the rich wine, and with impious hand
He then swore his kingdom forever should stand.

The song went round, the unseemly jest,
The scoffing words, and blasphemous breath;
The haughty King, with his brazen arms,
Ruled o'er the beautiful city of palms.

But, lo! upon yon distant wall
Appeared the spirit hand—
The trembling King with guilty fear
Looked o'er the afflicted band.

But see! the hand in words of light
Glanced glittering o'er their eyes—
Dread silence, horror, awful fright
As moving on its flies.

Mene, mene, was written on the wall,
And Tekel, Upharsin appeared to them all;
They sent for the Prophet, the King looked round;

Thou'rt weighed in the balance, and wanting art found.

Fashion and Folly.

This is an age of wonders rare,
Of vice and folly too;
Of notions that to me seem queer,
Of sight strange to the view.
And yet of all the silly things,
Of this most silly age,
Are those strange robes that Fashion flings
O'er top and foot and sage.

There's one who sports a Shanghai coat,
That hangs below his knees;
With whiskers like a Billy Goat,
A fit resort for fleas.
He struts and swells in bloated pride,
And thinks, "now, who has not?"
And acts as though the world beside,
Contained no Ape but he.

And here's another mimic the view,
Of rather doubtful gender;
He wears a shawl, as ladies do,
Around his waist so slender.
What species of the race is he?
Pray tell me if you can!
Here, such a looking Tuxedo can't be
One hundredth part a man.

And there's the Parson, richly dressed
In latest "cut and feather";
With silk and satin colored vest
And boots of patent leather.
His dickerie is so stiff and high,
(Without one note or speak),
He fears to turn his venal eye,
Lest he should break his neck.

On Sunday morn he struts the aisle
Of God's pure house of prayer;
But thinks more of some fair one's smile,
Than yon poor mourner's tear.
He craves a lengthy sermon o'er,
In cold and measured tone,
Peeched by some saint in days of yore,
Which now he calls his own.

And there's the maid so blithe and gay,
With nicely padded breast;
Who thinks the men who gaze, will say,
"See, what a glorious chest!"
From her small waist a hoop hangs down,
Even to her lady's feet;
And thus equipped, she gads the town,
A most egregious cheat.

Others again, whose snowy breasts
In native fulness swell,
So fearful that no eye may rest,
Where those sweet hillocks dwell,
Must wear their dresses hanging low Adown their shoulders bare,
That every man who looks may know
There is no cotton there.

And there's the little artful girl,
So innocent withal,
She, too, must enter Fashion's whirl,
And dance at rout and ball.
With arms around her mother's breast
She cries, and pleads, and begs,
That, as big sister shows her breast,
She ought to show her legs.

And thus it is: foul Fashion's reign
Has cursed this broad, green earth;
Nor modesty be deemed again
The gem of female worth.
While Fashion pleads and begs,
For maidens to expose their breasts,
And little girls their legs.

Anecdotes.

Pa, what is the interest of a kiss? asked a sweet sixteen of her sire.
Well, really, I don't know. Why do you ask?
Because John borrowed a kiss of me, last night, and said he'd pay it back with interest after we were married.

I'm glad that this coffee don't owe me anything, said Brown, a boarder, at breakfast.
Why? said Smith.
Because I don't believe it would ever settle.

Look here, ma! said a young lady just commencing to take lessons in painting, see my painting, can you tell what it is?
Ma, after looking at it for some time answered—Well, it is either a cow or a rose bud, I'm sure I can't tell which.

An Irish servant observing her mistress feeding a pet female canary, asked—
How long it took them craters to hatch?
Three weeks, was the reply.
Oh! sure, that is the same as any other fowl, except a pig!

Have you "Blasted Hopes?" asked a lady of a green librarian whose face was much swollen by the toothache.
No, ma'am; but I have a blasted toothache.

COMPLETE
Dental Establishment.DRS. CUMMINGS & FLAGG.
SURGEON DENTISTS,
25 Tremont Street, (up stairs.) Boston.

Dentists in every branch of practical and scientific Dentistry, and being conversant with the best known methods and latest improvements in the profession, feel qualified to perform all operations in a manner highly satisfactory to patients, and reflecting credit upon themselves.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH. By the improved principle of Atmospheric Pressure, teeth, from one to an entire set, are inserted firmly and beautifully, without the use of springs or clasps. Many beautiful specimens of Plate work, on gold, silver and platinum, are on exhibition in our Rooms, which, for taste, style and durability, we believe cannot be surpassed.

EXTRACTING TEETH. In this important and difficult branch of the profession, great care is taken to render the operation the least painful. By the application of a benumbing agent to the gum, the operation is performed with comparatively little pain. This new process of extracting teeth has been in use nearly two years, and we feel confident in recommending it to our patrons and the public, as lessening in a great measure the dread which has heretofore existed, of dental operations. In some cases it entirely removes pain, while, in almost all instances, it does much to contribute to the comfort of patients. The application of ether, which is entirely painless, is administered to those who desire it.

FILLING TEETH. This is the most difficult operation the dental practitioner is ever called upon to perform. It often times baffles the skill of operators who have been in practice many years. It is also, when well performed, the most certain and only remedy that can be applied for the cure of decayed teeth. But, it is effective, it must be executed in the most thorough and perfect manner. The preservation of a tooth, when well filled, and with suitable material, if it be afterwards kept constantly clean, may be regarded as certain. At any rate, it will never again be attacked in the same place by disease.

By the use of the new preparation of Crystalline Gold, teeth are not only arrested from decay, and partially saved, but venably restored to the form, comfort and utility of the original structure. By a wonderful property of gold, the metal, in its crystalline or precipitated state, by peculiar manipulation, passes from a pulverulent to a cohesive and solid mass, the same as coin. By virtue of this remarkable property, it is made to fill the cavity of a tooth, and even to restore its shape, as substantially as if it were cast.

The proprietors of this complete dental establishment will always be pleased to give their advice on the most judicious and economical plan, to children and adults, and the result of their long experience in cases requiring the opinion of practical scientific dentists.

Pure Potash
IN TIN CANS.
B. T. BABBITT,
68 & 70 Washington Street, N. Y.,
And 38 India Street, Boston.

THE Proprietor of this POTASH has for many years seen the necessity of having some reliable standard for the strength of POTASH. The adulteration has become so general, that it has, notwithstanding its valuable properties, gone nearly out of use.

The Proprietor has taken the responsibility of substantiating his name to every package, and warrants the strength to be uniform, and when used always producing the same results. Potash many times is adulterated with salt, which is destructive in making soap; it makes the Ladies say they did not have good luck, &c. One other reason that Potash has gone out of use, is, it is so unpleasant to handle, being put in wooden cases, and becoming a liquid in many cases, and very troublesome to the retailers.

Now the Proprietor first obtains pure Potashes, always being the same strength, and producing the same results; and will warrant it in all cases, if the directions are followed, to produce double the effect in making soaps, and all other purposes for which Potash is used, with full directions for making the best of Soft, Hard, or Fancy Soaps. It is made with little trouble; the ley is all prepared in five or ten minutes.

1 lb. Potash warranted to cut 5 lbs. of grease into good soap.
12 lbs. will make one barrel of beautiful soft soap.
Directions for making soft soap.
Directions for making hard soap.
Directions for Laundering and Hotels.
Directions for cleaning cotton waste that has been used for cleaning machinery of all kinds.
Directions for using this Potash in place of Sal Soda.

B. T. BABBITT'S
BEST SALERATUS,
IS prepared entirely different from other saleratus. All the deleterious matter contained in such a manner as to produce Bread, Biscuit, and all kinds of Cake, without containing a particle of saleratus when the bread or cake is baked; thereby producing wholesome results. Every particle of Saleratus is turned to Gas and passes through the bread or biscuit while baking, consequently nothing remains but Common Salt, Water and Flour. You will readily perceive by the taste of this Saleratus that it is entirely different from other Saleratus. When you purchase one paper you should take the old paper with you, and be very particular and get the next exactly like the first, (name and picture, located London-bread, with a glass effecting water on the top, as you see in the bill.)

Full directions for making Bread with Sour Milk and Cream Tartar and all kinds of Pastry; also for making Soda Water; also, directions for making Scalding Powders, will accompany each package.

Miscellaneous.

The Bride of an Evening.

BY EMMA D. E. N. SOUTHWORTH.

CHAPTER I.

Reading, a few weeks since, one of De Quincy's papers—"Three Memorable Murders," recalled to my mind the strange circumstances of one of the most mysterious domestic dramas that ever taxed the ingenuity of man, or required the flight of time to develop.

The locality of our story lies amid one of the wildest and most picturesque regions of the Old Dominion, where the head waters of the Rappahannock wash the base of the Blue Ridge.

The precise spot—Crossland—is a sublime and beautiful scene, where two forest-crowned ranges of mountain cross each other at oblique angles.

At the intersecting point of these ridges nestles a little hamlet, named, from its elevated position, Altamont.

At the period at which our story opens the four estates, in the four angles of the irregular mountain cross, were owned as follows:

The eastern farm, called Piedmont, was the life property of Madame Audery, a Virginian lady of the old school.

The western and most valuable estate was the inheritance of Honora Paule, an orphan heir, grand-daughter and ward of Madame Audery.

The northern and smallest one, called, from being the deepest vale of the four—Haw's Hole—was the property of old Hugh Hawe,
a widower of gloomy temper, parsimonious habits, and almost fabulous wealth.

The southern farm, named, from the extravagant cost of the elegant mansion-house, elaborate out-buildings, and highly ornamented grounds, which had absorbed the means of the late owner, "Farquie's Folly"— was the heavily-mortgaged patrimony of Godfrey Farquie Dulaney, the grandson of Hugh Hawe, and now a young aspirant for legal honors at the University of Virginia.

But little benefit to the heir was to be hoped from the inheritance of his father's burdened property. In the first place, old Hugh Hawe had brought up in his own name all the claims against the estate of Farquie's Folly—doubtless to prevent a foreclosure,
and to save the property for his grandson.

But, unhappily, Godfrey had mortally offended the despotic old man by declining an agricultural life, and persisting in the study of a profession—a course that had resulted in his own disinheritation.

To make this punishment more bitter to his grandson, the old man had taken into favor his nephew, Dr. Henry Hawe, whom he had established near himself at Farquie's Folly.

At this time, the disinherited heir, having finished a term at the University, had come home to spend a part of his vacation in his native place.

It was upon the Saturday evening of his arrival that he found the little hotel, and, indeed, the whole village of Altamont, in a great state of excitement, from the fact that the celebrated heiress, Miss Honora Paule, had just stopped there, and passed through on her way home.

Those who had been so happy as to catch a glimpse of her face, vied with each other in praise of her many charms, while those who had not, listened with eagerness, and looked forward to indemnifying themselves by seeing her at church the next morning.

The next day, Godfrey Dulaney attended church, where he saw and fell in love with the most beautiful and intellectual-looking girl he ever beheld. From the cheapness and simplicity of her attire, he supposed her to be some poor dependent of Madame Auderly, in whose pew she sat. Godfrey was completely captivated, and he resolved at once to woo, and, if possible, win this lovely being for his wife, poor girl though she was. He was glad she was poor, because she could for that reason be more easily won.

But on accompanying Mr. Wiloughby, the clergyman, and his brother-in-law, Ernest Heine, home after church, what was his astonishment and dismay at being introduced to the supposed "poor girl," whom he found to be no other than the celebrated Miss Ho-nora Paule, the greatest heiress and belle, as well as the best and noblest girl in the State of Virginia. She greeted him cordially, and in a few minutes the company were busily engaged in conversation. The topic of "capital punishment" having been started, Godfrey turned to Honora, and said:

I take an especial personal interest in having capital punishment abolished—Miss Paule, do you believe in astrology?

Honora started, fixed her eyes intently on the questioner, and then withdrawing them answered—

Sir, why did you asked me if I believe in astrology?

Because, Miss Paule, I was about to relate for your amusement a prediction that was made concerning myself by a professor of that black art.

A prediction, exclaimed Mrs. Wiloughby, drawing near, with eager interest.

Yes, madam, replied Mr. Dulaney, smiling,
"a prediction" which, if I believed, would certainly dispose me to favor the abolishment of the death penalty. Three years since, while I was sojourning for a short time in the city of Richmond, on my way to the University, I chanced to hear of the Egyptian Divis, Ach-sabad, who was at that time creating quite a sensation in the city. His wonderful reputation was the theme of every tongue.

Idleness and curiosity combined to lead me to his rooms. He required a night to cast my horoscope. He demanded, and I gave him, the day and hour of my birth, and then I took leave, with the promise to return in the morning. The next day I went—

Well? questioned Honora, earnestly.

My horoscope was a horror—scope indeed! It predicted for me—a short and stormy life,
and a sharp and sudden death.

Good Heavens! But the details?

It prophesied four remarkable events, the first of which has already come to pass.

And that was—?

The loss of my paternal estate!

Singular coincidence! interrupted Mr.
Wiloughby, as he arose and joined his wife and brother-in-law at the other end of the room.

I thought so when the prophecy was fulfilled, replied Godfrey.

The other three events, if they follow as predicted, must happen within the next two years, or before I reach my twenty-fifth anniversary. The first of these is to be the unexpected inheritance of vast wealth.

Upon hearing this, a bright smile played around the lips of Honora, and banished the clouds from her brow. She waited a few minutes for him to proceed, but finding that he continued silent, she said—

Well, Mr. Dulaney, go on! what was the third predicted event?

Do you command me to inform you?

No, sir; I beg you, of your courtesy, to do so.

Very well, he said, dropping his voice to a low undertone.—It was to be my marriage with the woman I should worship.

A deep vivid blush supplanted the bright smile that quivered over Honora's variable face. "There was a pause, broken at length
by her voice, as she gently inquired—

And the fourth?

The answer came reluctantly, and in tones
so low as to meet only her ear.

CHAPTER II. THE SYBIL'S CIRCLE.

The next day, Honora informed her grandmother, Madame Audery, of Godfrey's presence in the neighborhood, and the old lady sent her only brother, Colonel Shannon, to fetch him to Piedmont. Godfrey accepted the invitation. On his arrival, he found that General Sterne, the governor elect of Virginia, and his son, had just taken up quarters, for several days, with Madame Audery;
and the old lady, in his honor, at once sent cards of invitation to some of the neighbors to visit her that evening.

When tea was over, the company adjourned to the drawing-room, where, soon after,
the guests invited for the evening joined them.

First came Father O'Lougherty, the parish priest of St. Andrew's Church, at Crossland.
The next arrivals were Mr. and Mrs. Wil-oughby, and Mr. Heine.

Immediately after them came Dr. and Mrs.
Henry Hawe—the doctor, a man of great fashion and elegance, the lady, a delicate, pensive woman, with a sort of sad, moonlight face, beaming softly out between her fleecy locks of jet.

And, last of all, to the astonishment of everybody, came old Hugh Hawe, who had been invited as a matter of courtesy, and was not in the least degree expected to make his appearance.

He came not alone. On his arm he brought a young girl, uninvited, but whom, with grave courtesy, he presented to his hostess
as Agnes Darke, the daughter of a deceased friend, and now his ward, who had arrived only that morning, and whom, presuming on Madame Audery's well-known kindness, he had ventured to present to her.

Madame Audery, a reader of faces, was certainly attracted towards her; and, after a little talk, that confirmed her first favorable impressions, she took the hand of the orphan girl, and conducted her to the group formed by Misses Audery, Mr. Sterne, Mr. Heine,
Mr. Dulaney and Honora Paule.

Under the auspices of Miss Rose Audery, they were just about to form what she called a Sybil's Circle, for which purpose, Messrs. Heine and Sterne were dispatched to bring forward a round table. Miss Rose went to the cabinet to seek the "Sybil's Leaves," which she presently produced. And then all seated themselves around the table.

A dead silence reigned. Rose shuffled
the cards, turned them with their faces down,
and then addressing her right-hand neighbor,
Mr. Sterne, in a low voice, she demanded—

What would you with the Sybil?

I would know the future partner of my life, was the formal answer.

Draw!

The young man hesitated for a while,
smiled, and rejecting all those cards that were nearest himself, put his hand under the pack,
and withdrew the lowest one.

Read! he said, extending the card to the Sybil.

Hear! she exclaimed:

"A widow, beautiful as light,
'Twill be your lot to wed—
With a rich jointure, which shall pour
Its blessings on your head."

There was a general clapping of hands,
and shouts of laughter.

It was now Miss Jessie's turn to test her fate. The answer drawn was

"To dandle fools and chronicle small beer."

a reply that nearly extinguished Miss Jessie for the evening.

I declare, if there is not Mr. Hugh Hawe!
exclaimed the lively Lily, as the old miser sauntered deliberately to the table, and stood looking with indolent curiosity upon the game of the young people. Come, Mr.
Hawe! I declare, you shall have your fortune told!

Well, well—the commands of young ladies are not to be disobeyed, replied the old man, gallantly, as he extended his hand and drew a card, which he passed to the Sybil.

Amid a profound silence, and in a solemn voice, she read—

"Thy fate looms full of horror! From false friends,
Near at hand, perdition threatens thee!
A fearful sign stands in thy house of life—
An enemy—a fiend lurks close behind
The radiance of thy looks. Oh, be warned!

Pshaw! what serious mockery! exclaimed
the old man, scornfully as he turned away,
and gave place to his nephew, who had all the while been posted behind him, peeping over his shoulder.

Will you permit me to test my fortune?
inquired the fascinating Dr. Hawe.

I know thee!—thou fearest the solemn night!
With her piercing stars, and her deep winds might—
There's a tone in her voice thou faint wouldst shun.
For its asks what the secret soul hath done!
And thou—there's a weight on thine!—away!
Back to thy home and pray!

Look! I declare how pale the doctor had grown! exclaimed the flippant Jessie. One would really think, to look at him, that a deep remorse for some unacted crime preyed on him.

Nonsense! Jugglery! said the latter, turning away to conceal his agitation.

The eyes of Honora Paule followed him with the deepest interest—there was that upon his brow that she had never seen before.

The next in turn was Agnes. Turning to her, Rose said:

What seek you in the magic circle, lady?
My destiny, answered the luscious tones.
Invoke the knowledge!

Agnes drew a tablet, and passed it, as usual, to the Sybil, who read—

"Oh, ask me not to speak thy fate!
Oh, tempt me not to tell
The doom shall make the desolate,
The wrong thou mayest not quell!
Away! Away—for death would be Even as a mercy unto thee!

Agnes shuddered, and covered her face with her hands.

Put up the tablets! They are growing fatal, said Rose.

Not for the world!—now that each word is fate! There is a couple yet to be disposed of! Miss Paule, draw near! said Heine.

The cheek of Honora Paule changed; yet striving with a feeling that she felt to be unworthy, she smiled, reached forth her hand,
drew a tablet, and passed it to the Sybil,
who, in an effective voice, read—

"But how is this? A dream is on my soul!
I see a bride—all crowned with flowers, and smiling,
As in delighted visions, on the brink
Of a dread chasm—and thou art she!

Honora heard in silence, remembering the strange correspondence of these lines with the prediction of the astrologer, made long ago, endeavoring to convince herself that it was mere coincidence, and vainly trying to subdue the foreboding of her heart.

Mr. Dulaney said Rose, shuffling the tablets, and passing them to him.

He drew a card, and returned it to be pe-rused.

The Sybil took it, and a thrill of superstitious terror shook her frame as she read—

"Disgrace and ill,
And shameful death are near!"

An irrepressible low cry broke from the pallid lips of Honora. Throw up the cards, she said: It is wicked, this tampering with the mysteries of the future.

The above is the commencement of Mrs.
Southworth's great story, which is now being published in the New York Ledger. We give this as a sample; but it is only the beginning of this most interesting, fascinating and beautiful tale—the balance, or continuation of it, can only be found in the New York Ledger, the great family paper, for which the most popular writers in the country contribute, and which can be found at all the stores throughout the city and country, where papers are sold. Remember and ask for the New York Ledger of January 16, and in it you will get the continuation of the story from where it leaves off here. If you cannot get a copy from any news office, the publisher of the Ledger will mail you a copy
on the receipt of five cents.

The Ledger is mailed, to subscribers, at $2 a year, or two copies for $3. Address your letters to Robert Bonnor, publisher, 44 Ann street, N. Y. It is the handsomest and best family paper in the country, elegantly illustrated, and characterized by a high moral tone.

The story is, of itself alone, worth the price of the Ledger.

To pursue the history of the lovely heroine, Miss Paule—how she came to be a bride for only an evening, and all the strange and absorbing particulars connected therewith, will be a treat for all who takes the trouble to get the Ledger.

Her smile so soft, her heart so kind,
Her voice for pity's tones so fit,
All speak her woman—but her mind
Lifts her where bards and sages sit.

Richard Hoffman.

A TALE OF LOVE AND RETRIBUTION.

Rachel Bently, the lovely daughter of one of the richest merchants of London, having married George Hoffman, one of her father's clerks, during the old man's absence in India, he on his return disinherited her and discharged George. The latter being overwhelmed by disappointment took to drink; and in a few years became a habitual drunkard;
his wife supporting herself and two children;
Richard now a fine boy in his thirteenth year, and Mary, a sweet child of six—by selling, one after another, the remnants of her once costly wardrobe and jewelry.

On the last day of December of the year in which our story opens, Rachel was without food, light or fire, and that very day the rent must be paid.

Little Mary was moaning for bread, and crying with cold.

The drunkard father was at the dram-shop.

The agonized mother had but one more article of value left—a locket containing a lock of her father's hair. She had hoped to be able to save this, the last memento of her once happy home. But goaded by little Mary's cries for food she seized the locket, rushed to a pawnbroker's, obtained a few shillings, put by amount of the rent, and with the rest purchased a little bread and milk for her children, and then set out with them to visit the old confidential clerk of her father, Peter Mangles, who had ever been kind to her, to consult him about sending Richard away from the contaminating influence with which he was surrounded.

On returning home late on New Year's eve from her fruitless visit, for the old clerk was not at home, Rachel discovered that her husband had been home, and stolen the sum put by for the rent from the place where she had concealed it, and gone off again to
"The Crown and Magpie" tavern to waste it in drunkenness. Little Mary, chilled and hungry began to cry for food, and the suffering mother, in hopes of regaining a portion of the money taken by her husband, set out with her children to the haunt of vice whither George Hoffman had gone.

There was a great crowd at the bar of "The Crown and Magpie." The landlady—a stout, vulgar looking woman, with red ribbons in her cap, a profusion of false curls,
a heavy gold chain round her neck, and numerous rings on her fat fingers—was busily engaged in pouring out gin for her customers; the regular ones she was treating—for it must not be forgotten that it was New Year's eve.

Such was the scene of vice and dissipation which met the eye and sickened the heart of Rachel when, with little Mary in her arms, and protected by the presence of her son, she ventured into the house.

Is Mr. Hoffman here? she enquired faintly.

The question had to be repeated several times before she could get an answer.

Can't tell the names of any of my customers, replied the mistress of "The Crown and Magpie," snappishly.

Perhaps you will oblige me by enquiring?<

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, Jan. 16th, 1858.

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

THE CONDEMNED MURDERER. Charles L. Cater, the murderer of Mr. Tenney, on the 29th of Dec. 1856, the then Warden of the State Prison, in Charlestown, died in his cell in Cambridge, on Tuesday morning last, of consumption. He was tried in April, and on the 11th of April he was sentenced to one year's imprisonment, preparatory to execution at such time as the Governor may direct.

DORCHESTER HORSE RAILROAD. Samuel Hatch has sold the Dorchester Horse Railroad at auction to Stanley Gore, of the firm of Gore, Rose & Co., of Boston, for $82,000—the terms being $500 cash, and the balance to be paid in thirty days.

DAYS OF AULD LANG SYNE. In Stoughton, Christmas was pleasantly celebrated by a meeting of the "Old Club," which is probably one of the oldest singing societies in the State, as it was formed Nov. 7, 1786. The association is composed of members who reside in Stoughton, Sharon, Canton Randolph, Braintree and Weymouth. Its annual meeting is held on Christmas day. On this occasion the following persons were chosen officers: Charles D. Hayden of Braintree, President; P. W. Cushing of Randolph, Vice President; T. W. J. Holbrook of Braintree, Secretary; A. H. Johnson of Sharon, Chorister. The Town Hall was crowded, and some of the grand old choruses were rendered with fine effect.

S. or T. IN QUINCY. At the regular meeting of the Quincy Stone Division, No. 73, S. or T. held on Tuesday, evening of last week, the following officers were installed:—Emery Delano, W. P.; Ed. Damon, W. A.; Wm. McDonald, R. S.; D. L. Wentworth, A. R. S.; G. Watson Watson, F. S.; W. J. Vinal, T.; C. H. Pray, C.; W. B. Thayer, A. C.; Wm. F. Knox, I. S.; J. B. Newcomb, O. S.; Rev. L. Rice, Chaplain.

THE DRAMA. The performance of the Dramatic Troupe, under the management of E. W. Marston, at the Town Hall, last evening, we have heard spoken of very favorably. The reputation which they earned when they were last with us, secured them a hearty welcome. Since then, many additions have been made to the Company, of the best dramatic talent, enabling them to make strong castes in the most difficult pieces. During their absence, we are pleased to learn, that they have met with the most flattering success, giving entire satisfaction at the numerous places which they have visited. The stage is a good school when properly conducted. It is the world in miniature. Each one assumes his character; and those who sustain their parts best, receive the most applause. They promise but a short engagement, but we trust that the encouragement will be such as to induce them to prolong it. The bill for this evening is a rich one, "Woman—her Faith and her Trials," and "The Corporal's Return"—two very popular pieces, full of stirring incidents, of fun and fancy. Go early and enjoy yourselves. Their next performance will be on Monday evening next.

PROFESSOR CHAPMAN of Ambrotype celebrity, takes this method to inform the citizens of Quincy, that in consequence of the rush to his rooms, he has been induced, by urgent request, to remain one week longer, to accommodate those who may wish to avail themselves of his services. He positively will bring his visit to a close on Saturday next.

PROFESSOR WALKER'S Exhibition Ball at the Hancock House on Wednesday evening last, went off in fine style. About sixty couples were present, among whom we noticed quite a number of our most substantial citizens. "The Calico Ball," (long talked of) will come off at the Hancock House on Thursday evening, Jan. 21. From the unusual low price of tickets and the feeling abroad among the dancing community, we think it bids fair to be the best party of the season.

LORING FRENCH has removed his place of business from Hancock to that central and pleasant location, corner of Washington and Coddington streets. Without a more formal notice, he would extend a general invitation to his friends to visit him at his new quarters.

SUNDAY SERVICES. It is expected that the Rev. Charles C. Vinal, of Andover, will preach in the Unitarian Meeting House to-morrow.

DEMISE. Miss Leslie, the authoress, died recently at Gloucester, (N. J.) from the effects of injuries received last summer.

Massachusetts Legislature.

THE LEGISLATURE has been engaged the past week in forming their committees, receiving petitions, perfecting their organization, and preparing for the business of the Session. We perceive that Mr. Curtis, our Representative has been honored with an appointment, as one of the Committee on Towns. It is an arduous duty, requiring close application to business, but we feel confident that our frank and energetic fellow-townsmen will be found equal to the task.

Petitions have been rolling in upon various subjects, claiming the attention of the Legislature, which will have to be met in some form or other. Judge Loring's case in particular. The most rabid of the dominant party seemed determined to ostracise him; nothing short of his removal from office will satisfy them.

The ladies of Nantucket and other places have also exercised this privilege, and sent in petitions for the right of suffrage. They consider themselves most shamefully wronged in this case. They say that they are as competent to take part in all matters pertaining to the public weal, as the self-styled lords of creation; and to fill as honorably and usefully places of public trust in our Legislative Halls as many who are now sent there. We don't doubt it. Nor, if their prayer should be granted—but their first act, much to our discomfort, would be to levy a tax upon old bachelors. But the idea is feasible: the State House might be enlarged; a large nursery erected, where the little tender responsibilities, too young to be left at home, might receive the milk of human kindness while their Honorable mothers, were attending to the great interests of the State. We wish to see the experiment tried, although we may be sufferers, and that Miss — of Nantucket, and another Miss from Worcester, may be honored with seats in Congress, in the hope, that they may be successful in impressing the heart, of that odorous and uncomplaining old Bach, who is now at the head of the government. The little town of South Reading has also improved her opportunity in the way of petition. She wishes to increase the poll tax. And assigns as her reason, that this class of citizens, "generally get possession of town meetings, and vote inconsiderately and heedlessly, large appropriations of money, for splendid and costly edifices and other large appropriations." Wise Solons. They appear to forget that the class of community which they would hamper with new burdens, already contribute more than their share of the public revenue; they are taxed when they enter the world, and they are taxed when they go out—through the assessments laid upon every conceivable article which enters into their domestic wants. It is merely a revival of that obnoxious law, the property qualification. Our South Reading friends, however, came honestly by the idea, for his Excellency took the lead, when he recommended in his message that the expense of supporting the militia of this State, should be borne principally by this part of society. It would seem that this administration, who were so loud in their sympathies for the poor man during the election, are determined to throw the whole burden of such expenses upon their shoulders. We can view it in no other light.

For the Patriot.
Governor Gardner.

MR. EDITOR: The reign of his Excellency Governor Gardner is over at last. Three years ago he came into office with the largest majority ever given to a governor of Massachusetts. He leaves the chair to-day in a worse plight than even Richard. Richard could find "none so poor to do him honor;" Mr. Gardner walks in the train of his successful rival without even the poor consolation of the people's pity.

The readers of the Patriot will doubtless remember the cry by which Mr. Gardner was chosen governor in 1854. The country was in danger from the influence of foreigners; the people were ground down by taxation to support an oligarchy; the public money was wasted by extravagant public servants; the old politicians were a corrupt set of lobbyists, who served their private purposes, and cared not for their public duty; every thing was corrupt and decaying, and people were called upon to use the desperate remedy of secret societies, to right their wrongs and bring back the State to the old, honest and economical system of revolutionary times.

To make this new party successful, they adopted the old maxim, that "the end justifies the means." Burlingame and brother Baker, proclaimed the new gospel to the initiated by the light of the dark lantern—and Ned Buntline was employed and the "Angel Gabriel" was imported to preach a crusade against the Pope. Well, the game is up—the party is run aground and gone to pieces on the grand banks; and what has been the result? The mountain labored and brought forth, not one, but a whole family of mice.

To the Massachusetts delegation to Congress, of which the State could once be proud, has fallen the lobbying part of their party, or the questionable honor of fighting duels on paper at long range. Has the State been benefited in any way by the success of the party which chose Mr. Gardner as their standard bearer? Ned Buntline is as silent as the tomb; Gabriel has blown his last trumpet; the taxes are as heavy, and public officers are as well paid as ever; the morals of the community would be as good, if the celebrated "Hiss Committee" was never appointed, and the treasury as well filled, if government officers did not draw pay which they never earned.

The legislation of the party has been so supremely ridiculous, that even their own Governor could not carry it out. What great public question has been settled by the party who have just been driven from power? The Kansas question is still a bugbear, and will be one until settled by the old fogey Democrats. The temperance question is settled by making the only tipping shops in the State, where a man can legally get drunk, the property of the State. The foreigners still hold office, and are still eligible to office; and their votes contributed to the overthrow of Gov. Gardner.

On the whole the success and downfall of Henry J. Gardner is an instructive lesson, and not without a moral. He became all things to all men for the sake of office, and he now leaves it, and retires to his office in the city, to ruminate on the instability of power, and experience the endless mortifications of a broken down politician.

JUNES.

For the Patriot.
Episcopal Church.*

MR. EDITOR: Being one of those people who love to notice improvements wherever they may be found, and especially where they occur in our immediate vicinity, I should like to call your attention to the recent alterations in Christ Church in this town. It seems that that ancient society are waking up from the lethargy in which they have so long slumbered, and this is chiefly shown in their increasing numbers, and the late improvements in their Church edifice. The enormous pulpit and reading desk, have been removed, and the Chancel constructed narrower. The pews each side of the Chancel have been removed, and two small ante-rooms, one for a Robing Room, the other for the Organ of twelve feet high, and beautifully ornamented, are constructed in their places: an Altar screen has also been placed back of the Altar consisting of three gothic arches, supported by four pillars. In the place of the old Reading Desk, stands a beautiful Lectern of dark walnut. The Altar is perfectly plain with the inscription, "God with us," upon the front in old English letters. I am informed that these alterations were made after a plan drawn by one of their own number. Mr. Henry Hunt, who has evinced artistic skill and knowledge in his design which many older architects might be proud of. Mr. John Parker, the builder, certainly deserves much praise for the truly neat and ecclesiastical appearance of the whole. The Church was re-opened for divine service the fourth Sunday in Advent, at which time an address appropriate to the occasion was delivered by the Rector, the Rev. G. M. Bradley, in his usual free and happy style. We learn from the Reverend gentleman's remarks, that a new Pulpit is in process of building which no doubt will add much to the general effect of the alterations. We are pleased to hear that the Organ is to be removed from its present position into the new room prepared for its reception, at the left of the Chancel, and directly after that is done, it is proposed to introduce Congregational singing. The Church was also beautifully trimmed and illuminated on Christmas Eve, and on the evening of that "Festival," the annual "Christmas Tree" was prepared by the ladies of the parish for the "rising generation." Some very beautiful presents were distributed among the Sunday School Scholars. All were well provided with toys, etc., etc, which were distributed in great abundance. On the whole, for one, Mr. Editor, I rejoice to see the old Church in this town, (the mother of us all) flourish. And I trust, that she may increase, and that the sound, Scriptural and primitive doctrine which she has always inculcated may never be suffered to languish for want of support.

KANSAS. The recent election in this Territory, it is conceded, has resulted favorably to the Free State party. They found further resistance to the General Government useless, and therefore, like sensible fellows, went to the polls, and manfully discharged their duty.

DISPATCHES it is said have been intercepted by the Government troops implicating Jim Lane, the Kansas agitator, as an accomplice in the Utah rebellion.

CONGRESS is doing but little. General Walker's case is before them. A few weeks will bring them into the business part of the session.

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED.

In Kansas, the question of having slavery under the Lecompton constitution has been decided affirmatively at the legal election.—The Free State party did not vote, having agreed to open a separate poll. The letter of Secretary Cass, containing the instructions of the President to the new Governor, directs that the government troops shall protect the polls at this election also.

After the sisters had done up their chamber work, on the same morning that the conversation had taken place about Henry Chase going to California, Ellen said to Margaret—
"Let us go to the kitchen and help Jane Allen a little this morning."

"What! Ellen! do you expect I am going to work in the kitchen when we have a hired girl?"

"But, you do not consider what a great washing she'll have this week, and besides, she is not very strong you know, and a little help now and then—"

"Well, you can work all day for her if you like, remarked Margaret with a sneer, and she then left her sister Ellen and went up stairs to make her toilet, and Ellen went in to the kitchen to help poor Jane Allen, the hired girl."

Henry Chase spent his evenings with Margaret and Ellen Pierpont up to the very time that he sailed for California, but he noticed a great change in the whole family during that week. He tried to fathom the cause of it, but he failed in the attempt. But of one thing he was certain, that Margaret loved him as deeply as ever, and that she would remain true to him forever.

Mr. and Mrs. Pierpont was not aware that her pet Margaret was engaged full two years to Henry Chase. Had they known it, they would not have allowed him in their house for one hour.

In fact, Margaret would not have told her parents about it on any consideration whatever, and Ellen alone was in the secret, for Margaret told her all, the very night that Henry proposed himself to her in marriage.

The day for Henry's departure came, and he was to sail at two o'clock, precisely, for the land of golden promise. He shook hands with Mr. and Mrs. Pierpont, and as a matter of course, not to be wondered at, added a little more familiarity towards his promised bride, Margaret, and her ever faithful sister, Ellen.

Be sure that you write to me often, said Margaret. Will you not Henry?

I will promise you that much, at least, my dear; so now, all I've got to say to you, is that one sad word—"Farewell," and may Heaven guard you, until I see you again; and he jumped into the carriage that was waiting at the door, and in a few minutes he was whirled out of sight, but not out of mind.

The good packet Tempest left her wharf at her stated time, having on board a large cargo of living freight, chiefly young men of robust forms and ruddy cheeks, who was going to California to seek their fortunes.

The Tempest had a beautiful passage, with the exception of a few calm days, and two very severe storms, which they encountered as they were going around the "Horn," and in the due course of time, the golden hills of California loomed up in the distance before them, and cheer after cheer was sent forth from the young pioneers, whose joy knew no bounds, as they stepped their feet for the first time on the golden shore of their new homes.

Henry, with his select companions, (with whom he became acquainted in the ship,) went to work and put up a rude, but comfortable log cabin, which boasted of one small window in the rear, an apology for a door in front, and, in truth, it can be said it had any quantity of air holes, in whatever direction the eye would turn. But it answered the purposes well enough, being well provided with beds, blankets, buffalo robes, and good fires, they could well breast the storms and heavy rains known in that latitude of our prosperous and wide spread Republic.

Each man of the party (which numbered twenty-five) had his gun or brace of pistols and plenty of ammunition, together with a glistening ten inch blade, of Bowie's best make, consequently they were not in danger of starving while those deadly weapons were in their possession, and the game so abundant in every section.

They divided their party into different companies; some of the best marksmen went out gunning, others acted as cooks, and others seized their sharp axes and made the silent forest ring with their merry laugh, and keen-edged weapons. Indeed, each man done his allotted work with a good hearty cheer, and there was not a drone in the hive.

They spent a whole week in the log cabin for they needed a little rest and spirits, before commencing their hunt after their main object, gold!

Henry's evenings were spent in musings, cogitations, and reading an occasional chapter in one of his books, which he had stowed away in his trunk. The light of the fire answering his purpose for a candle, and a round log of wood for a chair.

Of old Henry's mind wander back to his native city, where he had spent so many happy hours, many years, in the company of one, who was now far, far away from his side. He saw, in imagination, the form and pretty face of Margaret Pierpont, the idol of his heart. He imagined himself by her side as in days of yore, telling her of his future plans, hopes and aspirations; and he longed for that bright day to dawn upon him, when he could have the heart-felt pleasure of calling her his own dear little wife, but he hoped and trusted in the ever bright and glorious future, which loomed up higher than the huge gigantic mountains before him.

Look here, boys! exclaimed a coarse husky voice, one evening as all the gold hunters sat round the big blazing fire which shed both light and heat all through the unique cabin. In an instant, all eyes were turned upon Ned Loring, the funniest and the greatest joker in the crowd, as well as the homeliest man that you could see in a day's journey.

Look where, Ned? said Bob Williams. What the ducé do you call that white looking fellow poking his nose into our society?

Where is he? who is he? inquired Tom Jones, jumping on his feet and seizing his gun, for a few minutes before, he was thinking about the red-skins or Indians who surrounded them.

Well, if I mistake not, drawled out Ned Loring, in the coolest manner imaginable, I guess it's an animal what doesn't belong to our tribe.

I am sure it must be a he or she bear, come visiting the distinguished tribe over which I'm proud to be captain.

A bear! it's a bear! exclaimed the astonished throng who were a little alarmed at the appearance of their daring enemy, who stilled looked at them, considering as it were, what to do.

Well, if I guess it is a b-e-a-r, drawled out Ned Loring, a second time; but his face now wore a different expression from what it did a few minutes before. There—that's a pill for him, I guess; and there's another said Henry, and so it went round, until the poor bear, lay prostrate and bleeding, outside the door, much to the gratification of all present.

That ere chap is dead as mutton, said Ned, as he walked up to his prostrate foe—Now boys fetch along your Bowie's and we will peel his hide off by moonlight, and have some of his fat ribs for supper before we go to our beds.

Ned took hold of the bear, thinking, no doubt that he was dead some minutes, but to his great astonishment Mr. Bear woke up from his bloody bed, and seized Ned, in the vicinity of the seat of his wide and strong mining pantaloons.

Help, help! boys, help me! The darned critter has got me foul this time, I know. Put a few more of those lead pills in to him, or else he'll soon put his ivory into me—There, that'll make 'em let go his taste of civilization. Now he's dead sure.

Those balls I let him have just now, said Tom Jones, has made him draw his breath a little easier.

The d-d porcupine! responded Ned, as he raised up his right arm to wipe the blood from his coat-sleeve, if I was alone with him that time, I'd had a hard job to get away from him. Eh? what do you think, Tom?

Well, I s'pose, replied Tom, he'd pressed you pretty hard to stop a while longer at all events.

No doubt of it Tom, my boy, but he didn't get a chance to do so, did he?

He received too many balls and lost too much blood, said Albert Watson, to do you any great harm. Ha, ha, ha! but it was a funny scene; it was capital sport Ned.

Was it, indeed! answered Ned, looking first at Watson, then at his pantaloons. So you think it was a funny scene, and a capital joke, Watson, do ye? Well, I can tell you one thing that if you was in my pants, I might think just as you do, but at present I can't agree with you about it being so very funny as all you fellows imagine. These are my opinions about the matter.

I'm sure you couldn't blame a fellow to laugh at such good fun, ejaculated George Cooper.

It's all right, replied Ned, say no more about it.

And if it isn't, said Cooper, we'll sew it up with a needle and thread in the morning.

Another roar of laughter rang out from the crowd as they stood looking at Ned, who was busily engaged peeling the hide off his foe's back.

Come boys, stop your laughing, and get your knives here, quick, and desec this bear, commanded Ned.

There was not one quiet hour in that log cabin that night; and as for going to sleep, or even thinking of such a thing, was indeed an utter impossibility. Ned was presented with the bear skin, which was no more than his just due for his manly services, and which he highly appreciated ever afterwards, as a relic of one of his life scenes in California.

Ned Loring was at the head and tail of everything. He was the tallest, leanest, and greatest punster of them all, and his very appearance, if nothing more, would cause a grin from the most seriously disposed person living. Ned was full six feet two inch high; his hair was as red as fire, and his small grey eyes, and his flat turned up nose, together with a luxuriant crop of red whiskers, gave him a most comical appearance.

He lost two of his front, upper teeth, when quite young, by falling from a tree; upon which he was caught stealing apples one fine evening. And according to his own account of the matter, he received more kicks and cuffs from the old farmer Hanson than he could count.

Well, boys, said Tom Jones, one night as he sat snuffing his pipe of peace, before a blazing fire, I think it's about time for us to buzz up some good gold region and commence our fortunes as soon as possible.

What say you boys?

Those are my sentiments, replied Ned Loring, and he continued, I'm going to start to-morrow mornin' to try my luck. We've stayed here long enough.

That's so, said Albert Watson, we can't get any gold unless we dig for it you know.

Well, then, as this is to be our last night in this venerable dwelling of ours, said Ned, what say if we pile on more wood, roast some more of that bear, sing some songs, play a few games of cards, smoke our pipes, and go to bed.

Agreed, agreed! shouted the quieter ones. Suffice it to say, they had a good time that night—eating, drinking, playing and singing until the dawn of day broke in upon them, in their harmless revelries.

After a hasty breakfast, they prepared themselves for their route. Ned Loring proposed that they should go in five different squad or parties and in three months from that time, to the very day, to meet each other again, if alive and well.

The proposition of Ned was unanimously agreed to, but said Tom Jones, addressing Ned, which party are you going with?

With our party, said one; no, with our party said another; but I tell you, Ned Loring is going with us, said the third; no he isn't either, put in the fourth; and I tell you, exclaimed the fifth and last party, that he is going with us.

Hold on, boys! shouted Ned, who found himself the centre of attraction all of a sudden, you know that it is an impossible thing for me to go with the whole of you, and I'm sure, that one party is as good to you and to me as another.

Well then, we'll cast lots, responded Albert Watson, so here goes.

That will end the dispute, boys, put in Tom Jones. Get your pieces of sticks ready.

Here they are, said Watson, who held the five pieces of sticks in his hands, so that nothing but the tops of them could have been seen.

Now my lads, said Watson, I hold in my hand five pieces of sticks, which represent our five little parties and whoever draws the longest one, will draw Ned Loring. Come draw yours first, Henry Chase.

All gone. Who has the longest? Ned belongs to us, shouted Henry with all his might. Hurra, boys! Ned is ours.

Well, I hope you are all satisfied, my boys, said Ned. After a warm shaking of hands all round, the parties separated with sad farewells; and many, indeed were the adieus, farewells, and God bless you boys, which were uttered upon that sad and eventful occasion.

Here, kind reader, will we leave our departed gold hunters, and return once more with the eye of imagination to Boston and see how things are progressing in the family of Mr. and Mrs. Pierpont.

Four months have now elapsed since the departure of Henry Chase for California. Margaret looks as blooming and as handsome as ever, and if we may be allowed to judge by appearances, she does not feel the absence of Henry, as much as would be expected from one, who is situated as she is.

Ellen wears a more sorrowful countenance and looks much paler than when she was first introduced to the reader. She speaks less and thinks more, than she used to formerly, and you can see at a glance, that there is something locked up in her heart which none but herself is familiar with.

Margaret is as gay, and as lively, and as coquettish as ever, and trouble with her is the last thing to find a resting place within her shallow and capricious heart.

I wonder, said Margaret one afternoon to Ellen as they were both sewing in the parlor, I wonder why Henry does not write to me?

What did you say Margaret, asked Ellen, who was evidently lost in thought when her sister Margaret addressed her.

I said I wonder why Henry does not write to me as he agreed to.

Give him a little time sister, for you know that California is a very long distance from here, and it takes a long time for a letter to reach here after it is written, and—

Here comes the postman now, interrupted Margaret; and laying down her work, she ran to the hall door, and the postman handed her a note from her friend, Alice Thorndike.

Another disappointment Ellen, she exclaimed as she entered the parlor.

Who is it from Margaret?

It is only a note from Alice Thorndike requesting both you and I to attend her birthday party, which is to come of to-morrow evening.

She says she is going to have several strangers there, and I have no doubt it will be a grand affair. I'm going, sure! ain't you?

No, Margaret, I'd rather not.

Why so, Ellen; what's the matter with you? O no much of anything in particular. I may feel better to-morrow than I do now, and then I'll make up my mind.

You must accompany me, Ellen, for I will not take No, for an answer. Please to understand that my good sister.

I find no pleasure in such places, replied Ellen, but to oblige you, I will accompany you to-morrow night, if nothing unusual takes place before that time.

You are very different from me, Ellen, said Margaret, for it just the place where I can enjoy myself, and you know that Alice is going to have a good many strangers there, too, which will make a great change for the better. Her previous birthday parties, as you are well aware, had too much of a sameness about them, on account of having the same persons there all the time. O, I do love a change of parties, of seasons, of weather, of foliage, of persons, even. Yes, I like to love changes of all things and of all kinds.

Changes, Margaret, quietly responded Ellen, are both useful and conducive to the promotion of our health and happiness here on earth; but there are some things—images I should have said—which we would never wish to change, I mean a fine and lofty mind, gentleness and sweetness of temper, in man, and woman, and a good, warm, feeling, and sincere heart. The heart after all Margaret is the greatest and noblest citadel of the human form. It is from the heart, that hate and love, joy and grief, wit and sarcasm, proceed.

Really, Ellen, you talk like a philosopher, remarked the vain and coquettish Margaret, as she was about leaving the sitting room, and attend to her music lessons, which occupied the most of her time.

Thus ended the conversation for the present between the sisters, whose natures, tastes, likes and dislikes, were as different as night is from day.

Good morning, Margaret, said the fair and noble-hearted Ellen, to her sister Margaret, as she entered the cozy little sitting room, the morning after the party. How did you enjoy yourself at Alice Thorndike's last night? Did it come up to your expectations?

Oh, I enjoyed myself beautifully. What do you think of that young gentleman I introduced you to? Isn't he real handsome, prepossessing and fascinating?

I presume you mean Mr. Ashley, do you not?

Yes, I mean Augustus T. Ashley. I learned his business and place of residence from Alice Thorndike.

What is he, or who is he, Margaret?

He is a clerk in the employ of Newcomb, Reed & Co., Pearl Street, and is a South-erner by birth. His father, who is a rich planter in Georgia, died when Augustus was very young; and so, he was brought up and educated by his uncle, his father's only brother, and they say when his uncle dies, he is to become heir to all his property, for he has no children of his own. Oh, Ellen, I do love him, he's such a fine, handsome looking fellow.

Love him, did you say, Margaret? But surely you cannot love two men? You love Henry Chase's little finger more, than you do this Mr. Ashley's whole body.

You are wrong, again, Ellen. I solemnly confess to you, my sister, that I love Mr. Ashley more than I do Henry Chase, nor can you blame me for it.

Margaret you astonish and confuse me, for allowing such thoughts to enter your mind, or to be spoken by you. Surely, you would not deceive Henry who is now far away from you, and has the most implicit confidence in your love.

I cannot love him now, Ellen, as I have loved him in days gone by. He may never return, you know, or he may change his mind as men sometimes do, when they are far away from the object of their love.

Henry Chase, Margaret, cannot, will not change. He has too much nobleness of mind and sincerity of heart in his nature to become as base and inconstant as all that. Ah, it would break his heart and blast all his future hopes and aspirations, if he knew that you thought of him thus. Am I not right Margaret?

It is not so easy to break men's hearts as you may imagine, Ellen; for some of them are as tough and as hard as Nature herself can make them.

But you cannot class Henry's deep affections with the generality of men. He, I think, is an exception to the general rule, and there are very few men to be found who can excel Henry in morals, goodness of heart and steady habits.

But you do not consider, Ellen, the great difference which exists between Henry Chase and Augustus T. Ashley. The latter is just the very ideal of a man I always wished for as a husband; and what is stranger still, he answers all my deepest longings of a wife's heart.

Everything about him corresponds with what I then wished, and isn't it strange that I should see him living, moving, waking and existing before my eyes. As for Henry Chase, he is good looking enough as a man, but that's not the greatest fault I find with him. He is poor, you know, Ellen, and is likely to remain so.

Pray, what if he does remain poor, Margaret? Would you not rather share his lot, defended by his brave arm, and idolized in his heart, than to become the plaything, the innocent lamb and vacillating wife of another, who would love you for a season and then cast you from him as he would a vile obnoxious wasp too loathsome to play with.

Well, Ellen, you can suit yourself and so can I. At least, I'm of age and you are not. That makes a great difference between us.

But, Mr. Ashley is to pay us a visit on Monday evening next, and when you become better acquainted with him, I know you will like him better than you now do Henry.

Never, never! Margaret. For your sake, I cannot so far forget myself. Were he as handsome as Apollo, and so rich that he could ride in a carriage of the finest gold, and lived in the finest house, castle or mansion which this earth can boast of; he never shall occupy that apartment in my heart that Henry occupies.

Then, it appears Ellen, that you love Henry Chase, more than I do. How is that? Explain yourself more fully so that I may the more readily comprehend your deep, and (to me) incomprehensible meaning.

I do indeed acknowledge, Margaret, that I do love Henry; but it is for your sake not mine. I love him because he is to be my future brother-in-law.

That, I fear, Ellen, may never be the case; therefore, you must not be too profuse in your love in that direction. I shall never marry him! for, it's against the inclinations of my father and mother; and you know that they would become insane, if they knew that I was engaged to him.

Margaret, I'm astonished by such language, as well as your coldness of expression, as well as your shallowness of heart. Your last words has capped the climax of your future life. And oh, believe me, you will be sorry for thus discarding the poor but noble wanderer, Henry Chase. What would he say, Margaret, if he could have heard this conversation from your lips.

He could say whatever he pleased, so now, that ends the matter. You can have him yourself if you like. I'll give you up all right and title to him! and so saying, Margaret Pierpont left her sister Ellen in a fit of earnest bitter anger.

Ah, said Ellen, who was not aware that Margaret had left the room. Ah, sister, what is outward beauty of man or woman, when compared with their inward nobleness of heart and soul? and—she is gone, and I've been talking to the walls, I see; and Ellen resumed her sewing with a heavy heart, as she pondered upon her sister's false love and fickle and coquettish heart. Oh, would that I could change her heart she soliloquized; but, alas! I fear that Mr. Ashley has bewitched her both soul and body. Poor Henry, what will become of him when he knows of her inconstancy towards him. His fate is now settled I fear.

For the Patriot.
Letter from the Far West.
WINONA, MINNESOTA, Dec 20th, 1857.

FRIEND GREEN: Since my last communication to you, we have had delightful weather, with the exception of a few drizzly days, you could dispense with great coats almost entirely. The river has not sufficiently frozen over to allow teams to cross and at one time which seldom occurs after it has once frozen over the whole moved down from this vicinity. Thus far our winter has been charming, and to the great comfort of many poor families. There remains considerable of our first snow yet in places; the prairie grass burns as freely as in the fall of the year, and last evening we witnessed the partial burning over of one of the "Tall Bluffs," in the rear of the city. It was a grand sight.

In my last I observe you have made one great typographical error and others of less note which deserve correction. Instead of "nine acres" raising four hundred and thirty five bushels of potatoes, it was one acre—and instead of names—Gorman and Cavenough. My letters are somewhat stupid or tame, and but for facts like the above would prove, I fear, but of very little interest to your readers. Pardon me for this apology.

The Col. and W——r in their piscatory ramble last week caught over one hundred of the genuine speckled brook trout; not a mile from where we live; several weighing over a pound a piece. By the way, this is the first time in a winter that we have caught these long winters.

None in our day enjoyed such fun or better appreciated trout fishing than the immortal Daniel Webster. I believe, however, it is not noticed anywhere in history that he was an expert in it; but he was one that would have proven himself to be in this country; I have frequently heard that he was very patient and used to fish whole days in brooks and not catch one. This may be accounted for in this way, "that there were good brooks to fish in," but "there never was known to be any fish in them." A brook for trout and a trout brook are two different things in my way of thinking.

It is known that he engaged many hours in angling for the "sharp eyed finny tribe," but while so engaged he was often more deeply engaged in catching ideas—fording streams, strolling in meadows and in green pastures, wandering abroad over hills and in woods, by brook side, or standing where the ocean's waves stop, contemplating the great hand of Nature, those thoughts that have inspired multitudes and which will live when generation after generation have passed away; is left to those who can best appreciate his noble efforts before the assembled wisdom of his countrymen.

When comparing him with us small fry, we readily admit that his catching ideas was a more legitimate business and leads to great renown. While he shook the nation with his eloquence after such piscatory rambles, we make many friends dance with joy over a "fried brown" string of charming speckled trout.

The last two or three winters, being so severe, it has entirely exterminated the quails in this region.

The severe cold froze them to death; whole broods were frequently found frozen to death under the fallen branches whither they had huddled for refuge.

By the cowardly hands of some known brutes in human shape, the deer which used to be very numerous have been very much thinned out. They frequently chased them down with a rut dog and cut their throats with a pocket knife. Such hunting is considered by good honest sportsmen fit only for dogs, and none but a dog in nature would be guilty of such an act. Give them fair play, a smooth surface, and if you can't hit them fair with a rifle ball don't go hunting for them.

If some of our law and order men don't come out here from the East pretty soon this kind of sport will be at an end in this region.

The most of these Western men are rightly termed "Border Ruffians." They don't know what law or restraint is; they are perfect desperadoes. Talk of sending missionaries to India, better send some out here, to teach these "critters" what territory they are living in.

THE Proprietors of the Boston Daily Ledger, grateful to the public for their generous patronage during the past year, desire to set forth briefly the object and aims of the paper and solicit a continuance of popular partiality. The Daily Ledger has now been in the control of its present proprietors for one year, and during that time it has made its own way among readers everywhere with astonishing rapidity. Every subscriber of this paper is entitled to a copy of the large and splendid Steel Engraving, entitled "The Greek Slave," also to a copy of the Cosmopolitan Art Journal one year, and a Certificate in the awards of Premiums, also a Free admission to the Dusseldorf and Cosmopolitan Galleries.

Thus it is seen that for every three dollars expended, the subscriber not only receives a SPLENDID THREE DOLLAR ENGRAVING but also, the beautifully illustrated Two Dollar Art Journal, One Year.

SAVE YOUR HAIR.
REMEMBER
PACKARD'S REGENERATOR
WILL not only restore gray hair to its original color, but will make the hair grow from bald heads. Read the following letter from one of the oldest and best hair dressers in Plymouth County.

North Bridgewater, Nov. 5th, 1857.
Mr. Packard—Sir—Your Regenerator for the Hair is truly a wonderful preparation. My wife has used it for the past few months on her head. It has caused a HEALTHY GROWTH of hair where it was quite bald; and it has restored the color to GRAY or BLACK, is natural color. I have been a barber for twenty-five years, and I freely say that your Regenerator is much the best restorative for the hair I have seen. Yours, C. TAYLOR.

Another letter from a well known man in Dorchester.
Upham's Corner, Dorchester, Nov. 9, 1857.
Mr. Packard—Sir—My Hair having turned very gray, I was induced to try your Regenerator for the hair and am happy to inform you that it has accomplished for me all that you recommended to me. My Hair is now a good color. Yours, THEODORE HERSEY.

FASH

Poetry.

To My Wife.

BY GEORGE W. DEWEY.

Come, draw thy chair beside me, love,
The present cares beguile;
What tho' the winter croons around,
There's summer in thy smile!
Let all thy smiles-beam on me now,
And o'er the future throw
The radiance of the joy we shared,
This day, ten years ago!

Aye, lean upon me lovingly,
And, with those eyes of thine,
Gaze fondly down the pictured past,
As I do now with mine;
And may the golden light, which shone
Upon Hope's rosy glass,
Illumine all the mirror's disc
Whereon the visions pass.

How like the mirror on the wall—
Obscured by mists awhile
Reflecting still the image there—
When sunshine spreads a smile—
Is now the inward glass we search
For faded scenes of yore,
Which, waiting in the light of love,
Will every time restore.

Entwine thine arms around me, love,
Recalling bygone hours,
The present to the past shall be
A rosary of flowers;
And as we reckon up the buds—
Some withered are the bloom—
A tear shall mark the vacant spot
Of one within the tomb.

A cherished one, whose voice rang out
With music of the spheres,
Where now, in anthem melody,
A vocal part she bears.
Ah! vividly the glances rest
That rosy face of glee,
Which, tho' a semblance of myself,
An image was of thee.

We could not wish her here again,
For, now we ever see
A cherub in the child we lost—
A sacred memory;
And, had she lived, a thing of earth,
To yield us earthly love,
We would miss the angel guide
To lead our thoughts above.

Love.

Yes, love, indeed is light from Heaven.
A spark of that immortal fire
With angels shared, by Alla given,
To lift from earth our low desire.
Devotion waits the mind above,
But Heaven itself descends in love;
A feeling from the Godhead caught,
To wean from self each selfish thought;
A ray of Him who form the whole;
A glory circling round the soul!

Later-Day Warnings.

BY O. W. HOLMES.

When legislators keep the law,
When banks dispense with bolts and locks,
When berries, whistles—rasp—and straw—
Grow bigger downwards through the box—

When that seltsch house or land
Shows leak in roof or flaw in right—
When haberdashery's shelves
Show window half the broadest light—

When preachers tell us all they think,
And party leaders all they mean,
When what we pay for what we drink,
From real grape and coffee-bean—

When lawyers take what they would give,
And doctors give what they would take,
When city fathers eat to live,
Save where they live for conscience sake—

When one that hath a horse on sale
Shall bring his mare to the proof,
Without a lie for every nail,
That holds the iron on the hoof—

When in the usual places for ripe
Our gloves are studded with special care,
And guarded well with whalebone ties,
Where first umbrellas need repair—

When Cab's weed have quite forgot
The power of suction to resist,
And claret bottles harbor rot,
Such dimples as would hold your fist—

When publishers no longer steal,
And they for that they stole before—
When the first locomotive's wheel
Rolls through the Hoosier tunnel's bore—

Till then let Cumming blaze away,
And Miller's saints blow up the globe,
But when you see that blessed day,
Then order your ascension robe!

Anecdotes.

My friend, the foreigner, called to bid me farewell before quitting the town and on his departure, he said—I am going at the country.

I ventured to correct his phraseology, by saying that we were accustomed to say—
going into the country.

He thanked me for this correction, said he profited by my lesson, and added,
I will knock into your door on my return.

A Dutchman was relating his marvelous escape from drowning, when his companions were lost by the upsetting of a boat, and he alone was saved.

And how did you escape your fate? asked
one of his hearers.

I did not go in to tepee! was the Dutchman's laconic answer.

A farmer told his man, who was thoroughly Irish, to run into the pasture and catch an ox.

I mean the off one; I will manage the other myself, he said.

Pat ran to do as he was bidden, but suddenly paused with the exclamation—
He is a reasonable man, anyhow. Bedad and how am I to know which is the orphan!

I believe, said a very tall Representative,
that I am of the tallest members of the House.
Yes, added a fellow-member, and the slim-est, too.

DRS. CUMMINGS & FLAGG.

SURGEON DENTISTS.

25 Tremont Street, (opposite) Boston.

D.R.S. & F., having had extensive experience in every branch of practical and scientific Dentistry, and being conversant with the best known methods and latest improvements in the profession, feel qualified to perform all operations in a manner highly satisfactory to patients,

and reflecting credit upon themselves.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH. By the improved principle of Atmospheric Pressure, teeth, from one

to an entire set, are inserted firmly and beautifully without the use of springs or clasps. Many beautiful specimens of Plate work, on gold,

silver and platinum, are on exhibition at our

Rooms, which, for taste, style and durability,

we believe cannot be surpassed.

EXTRACTING TEETH. In this important

and difficult branch of the profession, great care

is taken to render the operation the least pain-

ful. By the application of a benumbing agent to

the gum, the operation is performed with comparatively little pain. This new process of extracting teeth has been in use nearly two years,

and we feel confident in recommending it to our

patients and the public, as lessening in a great measure the dread which has heretofore existed,

of dental operations. In some cases it entirely

removes pain, while, in almost all instances, it does not contribute to the comfort of patients. The application of ether, which is entirely painless, is administered to those who desire it.

FILLING TEETH. This is the most difficult operation the dental practitioner is ever called upon to perform. It often times baffles the skill of operators who have been in practice

many years. It is also, when well performed,

the most certain and only remedy that can be applied for the cure of decayed teeth. But, it is of little use, if not executed in the most thorough and perfect manner. The preservation

of a tooth, when well filled, and with suitable

material, if it be afterwards kept constantly

clean, may be regarded as certain. At any rate, it will never again be attacked in the same place by disease.

By the use of the new preparation of Crysta

Gel, teeth are not only arrested from decay, and partially saved, but veritably restored to the former comfort and utility of the original structure. By a wonderful property of gold, the metal, in its crystalline or precipitated state, by

peculiar manipulation, passes from a pulv-rulent

to a cohesive and solid mass, the same as coin

by virtue of this remarkable property, it is made to fill the cavity of a tooth, and even to restore

its shape, as substantially as if it were cast.

The proprietors of this complete dental establishment will always be pleased to give their advice on the care and preservation of the teeth

of children and adults, and the result of their long experience in all cases requiring the opinion of practical scientific dentists.

WOMAN'S LOVE.

BY T. A. CONLEY.

CONCLUDED FROM OUR LAST WEEK.

Jane, why don't you go to the door, and see what is wanted, said Mrs. Pierpont to Jane whose hands were as white as flower could make them.

I'll go mother, replied Ellen, running to the door.

Good morning, Mr. Wilber. Have you a letter for me, she asked of the postman, for it was none other.

Not quite, Miss Pierpont, replied Mr. Wilber, but I've got one for your sister Margie-ret. It's all the same I suppose. There—

Good news, good news, Margaret! exclaimed Ellen, as she rushed down stairs
where Margaret was busily engaged in eating her usual lunch. Here's a letter from Henry. Please to open and read it quick, for he's so anxious to know what he says,
and how he's getting along.

Margaret read the letter very hastily and then returned it to Ellen for perusal. There, Ellen, just as I expected. He speaks of your luck, suffering and hunger.

Ellen read and re-read the letter, which was both brief and gloomy in its contents, and as she laid it on the centre table where Margaret could easily find it, a tear dropped on the envelope unknown to Ellen.

The poor fellow, said Ellen to herself, I fear he will die among strangers and be buried on the brow of some lone hill or in some lonely valley, without a stone or evan a wooden slab to mark the wanderer's grave. Oh! it is to be awful to contemplate.

The tender-hearted, the sympathizing
and the generous minded Ellen pondered.—
But how different, how widely different were the thoughts which filled the heart and soul of the unforgiving Margaret. Her thoughts were now wholly engrossed by Augustus F. Ashley, her new and handsome lover as she styled him.

Mr. Ashley did not forget to visit Margie-ret at her father's house. The old folks were actually delighted with him; and that,
of itself, was half the battle won on his side.
His visits became more frequent, and it was rumored, to the gratification of Margaret's parents, that he was engaged to her, and that it would be a match, sure.

He took her to balls, theatres, operas, concerts and to church. He patronized the living stables well, too; and he could tell by the look of the animal in the stall, whether or not he could go his mile inside of 2.40.
The stable keepers too, knew the man, and they always gave him the fastest team.

Holla! Ashley my boy, exclaimed Edwin Somerbee, as he entered a private room in a fashionable saloon on Washington street,
kept by a notorious gambler, where he found Ashley playing a game of cards for the drinks for the whole party.

Boys, continued Somerbee, what do you suppose I saw yesterday. Ha, ha, ha. O!
Ashley, you are a full-blooded game-cock!
I see.

Has Ashley been breaking any more hearts, Somerbee, asked Frank Dexter, as he was chaffing a pack of cards which lay upon another table on his left hand side.

You have guessed right, Dexter, responded Somerbee, but let us have the drinks and the cigars, before I say one word more.

Somerbee, I'll give the drinks and cigars round, responded Ashley, if you keep mum—is the word you know Edwin.

Ashley winked at the bar-keeper, who had just come in to answer their call.

What's wanting, gentleman, asked the bar-keeper.

Bring us in two bottles of champagne and some of your best-brand cigars. Mind, John,
the pure Havana, or none at all.

Now for that story of yours, Somerbee;
tell us quick, said Dexter, who had his feet
separated; one resting on each of the polished marble tables.

Edwin Somerbee told the story about Ashley's taking Miss Margaret Pierpont out to ride in a splendid double team, and report has it that he is engaged to her.

Capital joke! capital joke! Ashley engaged, eh? Ha, ha; ho, ho; well I do declare! that's a good idea, truly; and Dexter laid back on his chair and laughed heartily.

Is she pretty Somerbee? asked Dexter,
who had now recovered himself.

You may bet your life on that, replied
Somerbee, and if I mistake not, Miss Pierpont will soon be off the list for another.

Ashley, you know is the—after pretty girls. Why I could count as many as twenty-five or thirty dolls that he has given the sack to already. So go in Ashley, my boy,
I am willing.

Yes, my lads, ejaculated Ashley, I am all right. Congratulate me on another fresh bite, my hook is always good you know. I'm as sure of her as I am that this glass of wine is in my glass, so here's to her. Any opposition at all, Gus, asked William Lord. No, yes, that is, she was engaged to some fellow
by the name of Henry Chase, a mechanic, who is now in California. She often speaks of him before me, and if I could so manage it as to get him out of the way, (or out of the world, I don't care which,) I'd be all right.—

Her father and mother adore me and they all think that I'm rich as a Jew, but she has a sister who I do not like at all. But I was thinking of a capital plan, which I intend to put into operation as soon as possible, and it will work like a charm. I have it all planned. Good night, boys, for the present. I'll be here again about eleven o'clock.

Three long and weary years have come and gone, and Henry Chase was forgotten by all the Pierpont family with the exception of the faithful Ellen, who thought of him day and night since she had last seen him in her father's house. She could not forget him if her sister did.

Mr. Ashley happened to drop in, and taking his usual seat, he took from his pocket a letter and read it.

What's the news, Mr. Ashley, said Mr.
Pierpont.

I've just received a letter from a friend of mine who is in California, and he states that he has had good success, and that he intends coming home to Boston in a few months. He was always a fine young man.

Then he's had better luck than our young friend, Henry Chase, responded Mrs. P.

Henry Chase! exclaimed Ashley opening the letter again; why, my friend speaks here
of a person by that name.

He does? what does he say about him?
hurriedly inquired Ellen.

He states, replied Ashley very coolly, that he was a great gambler and drunkard, and that he died one cold night at the mines.

Gambler! drunkard! died! exclaimed Ellen. 'Tis false, 'tis a lie, a base ignoble lie!
I can't believe it. If he died, he did not die a drunkard and a gambler, for he was never addicted to either.

But he might have acquired those habits my child, said Mr. Pierpont. You must know that a man can learn a good many bad habits in that time.

I'm sure, said Ashley, that I am only reading to you what my friend has written to me.
It may be true or false for ought I know.—
That's all that I've got to say about it.

Ellen left the parlor, for she could no longer check her fine womanly feelings, and gave vent to her grief in tears.

Impossible! And yet it may be so. Perhaps he—No, no; I'm ashamed of myself, for thus harboring such foolish, wicked thoughts
in my heart, even for one solitary moment.

Oh, wretched Margaret! Unkind hard-hearted and obdurate sister; this, if it's true, is thy work. His death be upon thy head! and she fell heavily to the floor, which greatly alarmed the family. Mr. Ashley included, as they ran up stairs to her chamber which was directly over the parlor.

Ellen! Ellen, my child, what is the matter with you, tell me.

I feel better now, mother. Lead me to my bed.

She's rather nervous, I see, remarked Mr.
Ashley to Margaret, as she was coming down stairs.

Yes—slightly, replied Margaret, who was not apparently much frightened at her sister's condition.

Well, Margaret, my dear, said Ashley, I will now bid you a good bye; and I wish your sister Ellen a speedy recovery.

Good night Augustus, returned Margaret.

Be sure that you call again, soon. Don't forget.

To-morrow night at eight o'clock, precisely, Margaret, I'll be here again. And he then left for his favorite haunt on Washington street.

Two months after the above occurrence had expired, the Pierpont family, (with Ashley in their midst,) were laughing and talking as gay as usual, and Ellen was hemming some cambric kerchiefs for her mother. She was pale and careworn, and she seemed to be enwrapped in a little world of her creation.

All of a sudden she was aroused from her reverie by the unusual sharp ring of the hall door bell, which Jane promptly answered.

Does Mr. David Pierpont live here miss?
asked the stranger in a coarse husky voice.

He does. Do you want to see him, said Jane, who was terribly frightened at the man's appearance, whose clothes, whiskers and long brown hair looked anything but inviting.

I want to see him if he's at leisure, and ere the girl had time to turn round Mr. Pierpont was at the door, talking to the stranger.

Do you not know me, Mr. Pierpont? said he, I confess that I do not sir replied Mr. P.

My name is Henry Chase, the returned gold hunter. Do you not know me now?

Henry Chase! exclaimed Ellen. Yes father-
it is Henry Chase! or else it is his ghost.

I am thunderstruck! astonished! ejaculated
Mr. Pierpont. Come into the parlor Mr.
Chase and sit down. We really thought you were dead.

Not quite as bad as that yet, thank God, said Henry as he followed Mr. P. into the parlor.

The parlor was now in one grand commotion, and when all were silent, Margaret,
who was really perplexed, turned to the long-
lost Henry, and said,

We heard a few months ago that you were dead.

And who told you that, pray?

Our friend, Mr. Ashley, there. He got the intelligence from a friend of his who knew you in California.

Have you the letter about you sir, asked Henry, looking at him as though he would have annihilated him; and will you please show it to me sir.

With pleasure sir, I will show you the lines which relate to your death. It begins, there.

What's this? Great God! who could have written thus about me. What can the friend's name be. Ah! I see! Here it is, Samuel Brooks, the greatest villain and scoundrel in all California. There Mr. Ashley, thus do I tear it, although he is your friend. I know him. But you must excuse me ladies and gentlemen for my burst of passion here to night, 'tis all over now. Margie-ret I wish to speak to you privately for a few minutes, if you have no objection.

I have an objection was Margaret's quick reply. I don't want to have anything to do with you. Your conduct has been shameful here to-night.

Margaret have you forgotten me, or do you despise me on account of my rough appearance and worn-out garments; yod, my promised bride. Oh, Heaven!

My daughter engaged to you, said Mrs.
P. You're crazy or drunk—

Stop, stop, Mrs. Pierpont; don't use that harsh, uncalled for word. I pledge you my word and honor as a man, that I never was guilty of that abominable vice; and he who told you, that is a villain of the darkest dye.—
But now, that I know your feelings towards me, I'll tell you all, as you sit there before me.

Margaret, your daughter, and myself have been engaged for years, and I was in hopes that she would prove true until I returned;
and even now I am willing to renew my promise, settle down, and earn an honest living for her and myself at my trade. Are you satisfied Margaret?

Never, sir. Marry you, indeed!

Good night Mr. and Mrs. Pierpont; good night Margaret, and good night Mr. Ashley, give my love to your dear friend, Samuel Brooks.

Henry smiled sarcastically at Margaret, and left the family, as well as Mr. Ashley, in a very unpleasant state of feeling.

Here, Henry take this note, read it when you get home, and answer it at your leisure.

Ellen, God bless you, and He will. Thus, said Henry Chase, and putting his arm around her waist, he pressed a kiss upon her brow.

He's a desperate man, I should think, said Ashley.

Very much so indeed, remarked Margaret,
but where has Ellen been for the last hour.
She left us as soon as he came in.

Here I am, replied the sister: do you want me for anything in particular?

No, replied her mother; but we thought that California bear might have swallowed you dear, if you chanced to come across his path.

There is no danger of that; I have done nothing to Henry that he should harm me.

Oh! you ought to have heard him dear,
a while ago, returned the excited mother.—
He tore Ashley letter into fragments and accused Margaret of being inconstant to him;
and the funniest of all, he said she was engaged to be married to him. What do you think of that foolish notion?

Margaret was engaged to him before he left for California, and although she is my sister I must condemn her for her bad actions toward Henry. Now she is engaged to the gentleman before you, and who is to become my sister's husband in one week from this very evening. He is your preference or choice, continued Ellen firmly, looking at her parents, and then turning to Margaret she exclaimed, marry Mr. Ashley, sister, if you like, but remember that in doing so you will wed one who is like a painted sepulchre, fair and beautiful without, but false,
black-hearted and loathsome within.

Wife, said Mr. P., what is the matter with the girl? Is she mad? Mr. Ashley I beg of you not to notice her—the poor girl.

Of course not—she cannot mean what she says.

Ellen did not hear the above remarks fall from her father and the deceitful beau, for she had retired to her chamber and pondered
on her sister's fate and future career.

There was great noise and bustle, and setting things to rights and airing and cleaning of rooms, in Pierpont mansion that week;
and Margaret was all smiles, happiness and bliss. She looked the very picture of loveliness and beauty. The future to her was full of sunshine and joy, and her path was strewn with flowers, and not a cloud was perceptible in her sky, above. Her superb bridal dress was all ready, and she thought every hour a week until that happy hour would have arrived, when she would be called Mrs. Ashley.

Alice Thorndike was to be one of the bridesmaids, and she too was waiting for the grand event to take place with the utmost impatience.

Henry and Ellen had several interviews with each other, day and night unbeknown to this note of yours, Ellen, said Henry one evening as he was walking down Tremont street with her, has been a Godesend to me.
It has saved me many a bitter pang of grief; and from it I have learned that all women are not false and deceptive. But I did not expect such kindness from you. I thought that you hated and discarded me like your parents and sister.

Well Henry what do you think of the contents?

I'll take you at your word, Ellen, if you have no objection?

I've no objection whatever, Henry, if you have not; but let me look at the note again,
I can read it by the aid of this gas lamp. Ah!
that's it. I know my poor hand-writing well.

And I know its contents better, was Henry's reply.

The note was as follows:—

DEAR HENRY—I am sorry that my sister has proved so ungrateful to you, and placed her affections upon another. Forgive her for this great wrong, and let not envy or malice take the seat of kindness and forgiveness in your heart. Trust in God and He will direct you in the right path. You may, ere long, see some one else who will be more worthy of your love than the one who has forsaken
you. If not, I will love you. Ah, Henry!
I've loved you for years; you, not my parents, nor sister—no, not a living soul knew anything about it. I had it locked up in my weak heart and the key, until now, could not be found. I love you now in your poverty and rags better than I do Ashley in his most fashionable attire. I'll see you again to-morrow night at the corner of Park and Beacon streets, at seven-and-one-half o'clock, precisely—till then, adieu. God bless poor Henry!

ELLEN PIERPONT.

The note was folded by the fair and gentle
Ellen and returned to Henry with a smile.

Ellen, you would not marry me as I now am, said Henry. Just look at my clothes—my long hair and beard—and, worst of all, strip of every cent of money. I'm a complete bankrupt, and all the hope that is left me, is,
to fall back upon my trade.

As you are Henry, would I marry you in a week, in a day, or even at this very hour, for
I love you more than ever.

God bless you Ellen, my last, truest and only friend. Your words have given a new impulse to my heart, bright color to the dark picture, and a quiet, peaceful repose to my heretofore distracted, burning and feverish brain. Ellen I wish to see you here in this very place, to-morrow night, precisely at seven o'clock. I have something of great importance to communicate to you, which may interest you when you hear it.

I will be punctual, Henry; good night.

Good night—your noblest of your sex, responded Henry, as he gazed with sadness after Ellen, who was hastening home so that her parents would not scold her for being out in the night air—for Ellen had a severe cold in her head.

The lovers met at the appointed hour the next evening, and their conversation was very private, judging from the close proximity of their heads, which at times touched each other. They looked grave and thoughtful, and Ellen's eyes were full of tears, but whether they were tears of joy or disappointment it was impossible to judge.

So Margaret Pierpont is to be married to that handsome fellow, Augustus F. Ashley, said Susan May to Mrs. Crosby, who were Mrs. Pierpont's next door neighbors.

Yes, replied Mrs. Crosby; at least, the neighbors all say so, and what every person says you know must be true. The house is beautifully illuminated and I've noticed a great many strangers going in and out these two hours. Ah, poor Henry Chase, will I fear die of a broken heart.

They have treated him real mean, said Susan May, and I'm sure, I could have killed Margaret, when Mrs. Abbott told me of the rule and etiquette manner in which she treated him, and—

There is the Rev. Mr. Dwight, their pastor, just going in.

Just as I expected was Mrs. Crosby's answer.

We are waiting for you, said Margaret's mother, as the reverend gentleman entered the parlor, and made a very polite bow to his friends present.

I am all ready, Mrs. Pierpont; let the bride and bridegroom take their places here.

The minister was in the act of commencing the ceremony, when a loud ring at the door bell attracted their attention.

Who is that? asked the bride's father, as Jane entered the parlor.

It is that awful looking man with long hair and ugly whiskers, who was here about a week ago, answered Jane.

Don't let him in keep him out replied Mrs.
Pierpont.

But I am in I am here now, showing my face, who now stood before them, showing the utmost coolness.

What do you want here you crazy man;
enquired the gentleman of the house, who felt indignant at his new and unexpected intruder. Leave my house instantly sir.

I've come unasked to see Margaret and Mr.
Ashley married, and I pledge you my word of honor that I have not the intention of doing the least harm. Proceed with the ceremony at once, sir, he said addressing the clergyman who was familiar with his fate.

Oh! the fool is crazy said the enraged mother, so take your places ladies and gentlemen, and let him see the marriage ceremony.

During the ceremony all eyes were placed upon Henry who took his seat, so that he could look at his false bride full in the face.

Henry did not move once during the ceremony, but his face turned the color of the whitest marble. After the services were over and the twin were made one flesh, the reverend gentleman touched Henry on the shoulder and said with a hearty laugh,—

Now, my friend, I'll marry you. Come, select your lady immediately, I'm ready.

Peal after peal of laughter rang out from all present, at the jesting remark of the minister, and they listened with patience to hear Henry's reply.

I'll take you at your word, sir, replied
Henry, rising from his seat and taking Ellen by the hand and leading her forward—now
sir, proceed, we are ready.

I was only joking, sir, replied the pastor.

And, I was only in earnest, so proceed, I say, quick.

Put him out, gentlemen, said Mr. P. He is mad—crazy.

Hold on gentlemen, not quite so fast. I've got some friends of mine here; and he produced a pair of revolvers from his right and left pockets of his over-coat which frightened the whole party most shockingly.

Perhaps that Mrs. Ellen Pierpont will not marry you, said Mr. Dwight, eyeing the pistols very minutely.

Never shall she marry any body else! exclaimed the chivalrous and heroic Ellen, who was standing by his side, leaning upon his arm, and looking up into his face.

Now sir, said Henry, what do you think of this? Proceed I say.

But I cannot marry you, sir, replied the poor frightened clergyman. It is against the wishes of her parents, you know.

You must not marry them, Mr. Dwight, said Mr. P., who was almost struck speechless at the scene.

You can have your choice, Mr. Dwight, calmly replied Henry, to marry us, or—you know these friends of mine can tell the rest.

For the last time, I ask you to marry us.

I will, responded the clergyman. I'm ready.

And so is Ellen and I replied Henry. I have one request to make before this ceremony commences; and that is, that you all keep your seats quietly, for I'll allow no one, man or woman to leave this room until Ellen Pierpont and I become man and wife;

or if you please, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Chase.

I will not leave a hair of your head if you will keep away from Ellen and I. That's all I've got to say. Proceed sir; we are ready.

The knot was tied at last, and Henry Chase and Ellen Pierpont were bound to each other for life.

Now, Mr. Dwight, said Henry, take this pistol for your fee, and Mr. Pierpont, you can take that, to remember this memorable occasion. Don't be afraid of them, sirs, they are not loaded! Now Ellen get your bonnet and sawl on and follow me this very minute.

I am ready, Henry; lead you the way.

board, and a false wig, but not a false heart; and that instead of ordering a carriage, he went noiselessly up stairs into Ellen's room to change his old garments for the new ones which were already on his back.

One year had passed rapidly away and Mrs. Ashley is a mother! Her husband left her on a sick bed in the city of Philadelphia, two months before the birth of her son, a fine black-eyed boy. She wrote to her father and mother, informing them of her sad and destitute condition, and begged of them to send her money enough to take her back again to Boston where she shortly, after her arrival, died in his very same room she was married in one year before. Henry and Ellen Chase adopted the poor little orphan, and Ellen would insist that he should be called, Henry Chase Ashley, to which he very readily gave his consent. Henry C. Ashley has a pretty little cousin now, who is five months his junior, and her name is called after his mother and aunt Margaret Ellen Chase. She is as playful as a kitten, and as sweet and rosy cheeked as a wild flower of the forest. They are too young and too innocent, to know the heart trials of their respective fathers and mothers, and if they should hear it in after years, may it be a warning to them both to profit by the sad lesson before them.

David Pierpont and his wife have become wise when it is too late. They have learned a good lesson, which will go down with them to their very graves.

He still keeps in the old stand, at the West end, and over the store door, in large gilt letters, may be seen, Pierpont, Chase & Co. The silent member of the firm is no less a personage, than Henry's best friend, Ned Loring, who often amuses his friends by telling them of his hair-breadth escapes with tigers, bears and robbers, which used to be so common in California, when he and his friend Henry were there digging out gold among the hills. Ned Loring is now a married man. Henry got him his wife; one that is noted more for her untiring industry than for her beauty. But Ned is pleased with her. It was a very lucky day for Jane Thatcher, Mrs. Pierpont's servant girl, when Ned Loring crossed her path—and now she thinks that he is quite a good looking fellow when shaved and dressed up. Jane insists upon Ned's having those from teeth of his, which he lost when a boy, stealing apples, replaced again by some good artist. But Ned is inexorable. He says, look now, Jane Loring; you married me without those little pieces of ivory and if you keep a barking so I'll have the rest of them knocked out. That I guess will settle the question.

One word more, in conclusion, reader, in regard to the fine, handsome, and dashing gentleman, Augustus Franklin Ashley.—Shortly after his marriage, he moved with his bride to Philadelphia, where he became reckless and dissipated, a gambler and an outcast from society. When he fled from the wife of his heart,—her, whom he promised before God and man to love, cherish and defend—he sank deeper and deeper in crime; until poverty, sickness and crime claimed him as their victim. He wrote to Mr. Pierpont, acknowledging the wrong he had done Henry Chase and asked his forgiveness. But let us drop the curtain of humanity over his infirmities.

"To err is human,
To forgive Divine."

And now, indulgent reader, you have heard my story of "The Returned Gold Hunter," or, "Woman's Love," and I will bid you for the present a kind adieu.

PICKEREL FISHING. Four gentlemen of this town, Nathaniel White, Alexander Felts, Luke Rideout and Isaac H. Wiley, visited on Monday last, for piscatory pleasure, a pond in the town of Halifax, and during the day succeeded in catching fifty-four good Pickerel, all of fair size, the largest weighing over four pounds. Through the kind attentions of Mr. Rideout we were liberally remembered, and our friends will please accept our thanks for their very acceptable favor. We enjoyed the feast.

EXPECTED CONCERT. We learn from reliable authority that Miss Lizzie D. Chapman, a very popular young vocalist, will shortly visit this town. The public press speak of Miss C's singing as very fine, her voice melodious, particularly in the higher notes, sweet and clear. Particulars hereafter.

REAL ESTATE NOTICE. We would call attention to the advertisement of J. W. Maynard, No. 8 Congress Square, Boston, in today's paper. Mr. Maynard has been engaged in the business many years, and is meritoriously known for his ability and promptness.

SOCIAL GATHERING at the house of the Rev. Mr. Clark. The ladies of this Society will be perceived, intend honoring their pastor with a social visit on Tuesday evening next. A general invitation to the friends of that gentleman is extended. The Committee of arrangements promise that it shall be truly a social, intellectual and attractive entertainment. We have no doubt of it. For when they set to work, we may be sure that "A good time is coming."

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, Jan. 30th 1858.

"BORN TO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

THE SPIRITUALISTS' LECTURE at the Town Hall on Wednesday evening was quite fashionably and numerously attended; between four and five hundred of our own and citizens from abroad were present. The arrangements were admirable; every thing was done which could add to the pleasure and comfort of the party. Miss Johnson of Medford, Mrs. Carver of Quincy, the Messrs. Barbank and Amodey of Boston, and Mrs. Hantley of New Hampshire, in the above order, severally addressed the company upon subjects connected with the occasion, interspersed with songs and glees by that excellent troupe of performers, the Quincy Quartette Club, under the direction of their popular leader, D. L. Wentworth, Esq. which occupied about two hours. During these exercises, and while Mrs. Amodey was speaking, she suddenly paused, and requested some one to furnish a subject for a poem—music was mentioned, when a beautiful piece was immediately improvised, of some twelve or fifteen verses, pronounced by competent judges to be a most masterly production. At the conclusion of these interesting ceremonies, the scene was instantly changed; the floor was cleared, a happy circle was formed, of youth and beauty, to join in the social dance, led off by the inspiring music of a favorite band. The festivities were kept up until a late hour and closed in a most happy manner. Its objects were benevolent; charity for the poor. It was the first gathering of the kind by the society; we trust it will not be the last.

UNIVERSALIST LECTURE. The Ladies of the Universalist Society held their annual Levee in the Town Hall, on Wednesday evening next. We notice that they have made some acceptable changes in the program of former years, dispensing with the somewhat tiresome Chaffee Box and Post Office, and substituting the more novel and pleasing amusement of Tableaux. Judging from the ability and experience of those having the matter in hand, the entertainment cannot be any otherwise than attractive and successful. We also learn that the Boston Brass Band, including the Hall Brothers, will furnish serenade music during the first part of the evening and the quadrille music for dancing, which in itself will be a rich treat. Truly, this will be the Levee of the season.

THEATRICAL. The drama had a most successful run during the short engagement of Marston's favorite Troupe. The popular manager and his talented Company made an impression and left a reputation which will always secure them a hearty welcome. With himself and lady, Pratt and Knight, and other dramatic talent obtained from abroad, novelties were produced which filled, night after night, the Town Hall, with audiences, which spoke out their sentiments in rounds of applause. On Thursday evening of last week, the Niagara Engine Company, by special invitation, attended the Theatre, accompanied by our new Band, whose rich strains of music done much to enliven the occasion, and touched a sympathetic chord, which vibrated sweetly with the other entertainments. On Friday evening the Tigers were present; on Saturday—the Granite boys were there; and on Monday evening, the Culture and Hook and Ladder Companies honored the house with their presence. On their return they were escorted to their respective quarters, by the Band, and in the full glare of their torch lights made a fine appearance. We received the compliments of the evening as they passed, which is reciprocated in full, Mr. Marston since his sojourn with us has received many substantial evidences of public esteem, which must have been highly gratifying to his feelings. He closed his engagement on Tuesday evening, to a full house—much to the regret of many, and we are sure, with the best wishes of the community. They contemplate visiting us again early in the spring. The Company is now at Hingham.

MAMMOTH HOG. A hog raised by Mr. Sampson, of Weymouth, was exhibited in this town on Wednesday last, which is justly entitled to this distinction. His length was seven feet; his girth seven and a half; weighing eleven hundred pounds. We have some large specimens in Quincy, but yield the palm in this instance to Weymouth. We understand that he has recently been purchased by Mr. Hobart of that town, who intends him for exhibition.

ACCIDENT. On Saturday afternoon of last week, the wife of Jeremiah Cornell, while playing with her young child, fell through a decayed cellar door, upon a mass of stones and rubbish, badly breaking her knee-joint Dr. Saville skillfully adjusted the splintered bones and dressed her wounds. We understand that the woman is doing well, although from the severity of her injuries it will be a long time before she can recover the use of her knee-joint.

Several communications omitted this week.

Special Notices.

The Ladies of his Society will provide the entertainment for the occasion, which will no doubt be done in their usually elegant and attractive style.

It is presumed the occasion will be one as heretofore of social, rational enjoyment and salutary tendency.

Mr. Clark's friends will please extend the invitation to any as they shall deem proper. Per order Committee of Arrangements. Quincy, Jan. 30. 1v

Old Stand Opened Again!!

Poetry.

Nothing is Lost

Nothing is lost; the drop of dew
Which trembles on the leaf or flower
Is but exhaled, to fall again
In summer's thunder shower?
Perchance to shine within the bow,
That fronts the sun at fall of day;
Perchance to sparkle in the flow
Of fountains far away.

Nought lost, for even the tiniest seed
By wild birds borne, or breezes blown,
Finds something suited to its need
Wherein 'tis sown and grown;
Perchance finds sustenance and soil
In some remote and desert place,
Or mid the crowded homes of toil
Sheds usefulness and grace.

The little draft of common dust,
By the March wind disturbed and tossed,
Though scattered by the fugal gust,
Is changed, but never lost;
It may yet bear some sturdy stem,
Some proud oak battling with the blast,
Or crown with verdurous diadem,
Some ruin of the past.

The furnace quenched, the flame put out,
Still cling to life, and burn away,
Transformed, diffused and blown about,
To burn again elsewhere.
Haply to make the beacon blaze,
Which gleams ahead the wayward,
Or light the social lamp, whose rays
Illumine the homes of taste.

The touching tones of minstrel art,
The breathing of the mournful flute,
Which we have heard with listening heart,
Are not extinct when mute;
The language of some household song,
The perfume of some cherished flower,
Though gone from our senses, lying
To memory's after hour.

So with our words, or harsh or kind,
Uttered, they are not all forgot;
They leave their influence on the mind,
Pass on, but perish not;
As they are spoken, as they fall,
Upon the spirit spoken to,
Scorch it like drops of burning gall,
Or soothe like honey-dew.

So with our deeds for good or ill,
They leave their power, scarce understood;
Then let us use our better will
To make them live with good;
Like circles on a lake they go,
Ring within ring, and never stay;
Oh, that your deeds were fashioned so
That they might live all ways.

Then, since these lesser things ne'er die,
But work beyond our poor control,
Say, shall that suppliant for the sky,
The greater human soul?
Ah, no! it still will spare the past,
And search the future for its rest—
Oh, joy! if it be found at last
Among the pure and blest!

Judge not a Man.

Judge not a man by the cost of his clothing,
Unheeding the life-path that he may pursue,
Or oft you'll admire a heart that needs loathing,
And fail to give honor where honor is due.
The pain may be hard and the fingers stiff Jointed,
The coat may be tattered, the cheek worn
With tears,
But greater than Kings and Labors anointed,
And you can't judge a man by the coat that he wears.

Give me the man as a friend and a neighbor,
Who toils at the loom—with the spade or the plough—
Who wins his diploma of manhood by labor,
And purchases wealth by the sweat of his brow.
Why should the broadcloth alone be respected,
And the man be despised who in his an appears?

While the angels in heaven have their limbs unprotected,
You can't judge a man by the coat that he wears.

Judge of a man by the work he is doing,
Speak of a man as his actions demand;
Watch well the path that each is pursuing,
And let the most worthy be chief of the land!
And the man shall be found 'mid the close ranks
Of labor,
Be known by the work that his industry rears,
And his chieftain, when won, shall be dear to his neighbor
And we'll honor the man, whatever he wears.

Lovers' Meeting

When lovers meet in adverse hour,
'Tis like a sun glimpe through a shower;
A watery ray an instant seen,
Then darkly closing clouds between.

Anecdotes.

Dear friend Joe, if you'll get my pants done by Saturday night, I shall be forever indebted to you.
If that's your game, they'll not be done,
said the tailor.

Daddy, I want to ask you a question.
Well, my son?
Why is neighbor Smith's liquor shop like a counterfeit shilling?
I can't tell, my son.
Because you can't pass it, said the boy.

A fellow went into a fashionable millinery shop and inquired of the lady if she had any skirts?
Plenty of all kinds.
What do you ask a cord, said the chap?
A cord? said the woman.
Yes, I want about a cord. Up in our diggins the petticoats has got out; and seeing that you advertise "corded skirts," I think while my hand is in, I'll take what you have corded up. The milliner fainted.

Would you like me to give you a shilling?
asked a little boy of a gentleman he met in the street. To be sure, was the reply. Very well, then, said the boy, do unto others as you would others should do unto you.

COMPLETE
Dental Establishment.
DRS. CUMMINGS & FLAGG.

SURGEON DENTISTS.

25 Tremont Street, (op stairs,) Boston.

DRS. C. & F., having had extensive experience in every branch of practical and scientific Dentistry, and being conversant with the best known methods and latest improvements in the profession, feel qualified to perform all operations in a manner highly satisfactory to patients,
and reflecting credit upon themselves.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH. By the improved principle of Atmospheric Pressure, teeth, from one
to an entire set, are inserted firmly and beautifully, without the use of springs or clasps. Many beautiful specimens of Plate work, on gold,
silver and platinum, are on exhibition at our Rooms, which, for taste, style and durability,
we believe cannot be surpassed.

EXTRACTING TEETH. In this important
and difficult branch of the profession, great care
is taken to render the operation the least painful. By the application of a benumbing agent to the gum, the operation is performed with comparatively little pain. This new process of extracting teeth has been in use nearly two years,
and we feel confident in recommending it to our patrons and the public, as lessening in a great measure the dread which has heretofore existed
of dental operations. In some cases it entirely removes pain, while in almost all instances, it does much to contribute to the comfort of patients. The application of ether, which is entirely painless, is administered to those who desire it.

FILLING TEETH. This is the most difficult operation the dental practitioner is ever called upon to perform. It often-times baffles the skill of operators who have been in practice
many years. It is also, when well performed,
the most certain and only remedy that can be applied for the cure of decayed teeth. But, it is effective, it must be executed in the most thorough and perfect manner. The preservation of a tooth, when well filled, and with suitable
material, if it be afterwards kept constantly
clean, may be regarded as certain. At any rate, it will never again be attacked in the same place by disease.

By the use of the new preparation of CRYS-TAL, teeth are not only freed from decay and partially saved, but verily restored to the form, comfort and utility of the original structure. By a wonderful property of gold, the metal, in its crystalline or precipitated state, by peculiar manipulation, passes from a pulverulent to a cohesive and cold mass, the same as coin. By virtue of this remarkable property, it is made to fill the cavity of a tooth, and to restore
its shape, as substantially as if it were cast.

The proprietors of this complete dental establishment will always be pleased to give their advice on the care and preservation of the teeth of children and adults, and the result of their long experience in cases requiring the opinion of practical scientific dentists.

Resolution.
THE Corporation existing between Daniel Baxter & George L. Baxter, under the firm of Daniel Baxter & Co., was dissolved on the 19th of July last, by mutual consent.

Daniel Baxter and John A. Wood will continue business at the Store of the Subscriber, under the firm of Daniel Baxter & Co. The Subscriber returns his sincere thanks to his friends and public for the very liberal patronage bestowed on the old firm and asks its continuance in the new, which will be supplied with market price, for cash or credit.

Hall's Great

SCROFULAR REMEDY.

THIS Purely Vegetable Preparation is pleasant

and agreeable to the taste, and simple in its action, causing neither vomiting or purging. It acts directly upon the primary cause of disease, regulates the Bowels, removes all vitiated secretions, giving a healthy action to the Liver and a correct tone to the Stomach. It overcomes that feeling of Lassitude which is often experienced in the Spring and Summer, and restores and re-ever instituted. This is strong language, but I know of no case where it is more demanded than here. When the hard and scanty earnings of the "Hewers of wood, and drawers of water," are extorted from them under guise of ameliorating their condition by providing a suitable home for their families, or accumulating something in time of need.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, Feb. 6th 1858.

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

Give to the Poor.

We have read somewhere, that "whoever giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord," and having the pecuniary welfare of our fellow-citizens near our editorial heart, have thought it no more than friendly advice to ask our readers to invest a little of their surplus capital in such a loan. An effort is being made to obtain subscriptions to another entertainment in the Town Hall, the proceeds of which are to be devoted to charitable purposes. We understand that Mrs. Barrow has signified her willingness to assist in contributing to this "most excellent gift of charity" among us, by reading some of her popular sacred and secular poetry for the benefit of the poor.

We trust we shall be able to announce in our next issue, the time and programme of these benevolent readings.

AMUSEMENTS. Our citizens have been enjoying themselves in a variety of ways during the present week. First in order, was the Ball of the Hancock Light Guards at the Town Hall, on Friday evening last. It was a very pretty affair. The party was made up of sixty-five couples—principally members of the Company—including, however, many of the substantial men of Quincy with their partners. There were present enough for comfort, and to enjoy with unobstructed freedom the fascinating and graceful waltz. The Germania Band discoursed the music for the occasion in perfect harmony with our taste and feelings. Col. Webb, of the Hancock House furnished the supper. It was a bountiful one, served up in the Col's. admirable style. The dance was kept up until an early hour in the morning, when an adjournment was called for until the twenty-second.

On Tuesday evening, the Rev. Nelson was entertained at his residence a social circle of his intimate friends and others of our citizens. Although the weather was damp and gloomy, unfavorable for such visits, still the company was large, many from abroad being present. The reception was hearty and welcome, and the numerous guests who had thus assembled, out of respect to the man, for his many social virtues, both in public and private life, passed a most agreeable and happy evening.

On Wednesday evening, according to previous arrangement, the Universalist Festival took place. For some time previous, in an unostentatious way, notice was given by the Society in a published programme, of their intentions on this occasion. At early candle-light, the doors of the Town Hall were thrown open, and an eager populace soon began to assemble, without any abatement, until the place was literally crammed to overflowing, by the curious and pleasure-seeking portion of our citizens. Among the group, we noticed all grades of society. The professional man, the mechanic, clerk and laborer; the straitlaced orthodox, the unassuming Unitarian, and the zealous worshipper of his immaculate Holiness, the Pope. It was in truth, a universal gathering. A true type of the order; whose charity and benevolence embrace within its folds the whole race of mankind. And here lies the secret of their success when they engage in such matters; perfect freedom from sectarian restraint, and planting themselves on the broad principle of universal sympathy. The first exercises of the evening, was the exhibition of some very interesting Tableaux, representing scenes in every day life; many of them were true to Nature, which were well received by the audience. There were twelve or fifteen in all, which occupied about two hours in exhibition. Dancing with other amusements took up the remainder of the evening, and which were not terminated until the light of another day admonished the joyous party that it was time to separate. It is estimated that as many as eight or nine hundred visitors were present,—the largest gathering of the kind of the season. Thus opened and closed the "Annual Festival" of the Universalists of this town.

CONCERT. The Concert advertised in another column, promises, if report speaks true, to be a rich musical entertainment. Miss Chapman presents claims for the public favor of no ordinary kind. Young, accomplished, with a clear, musical, soprano voice, of great compass, she has won an enviable reputation in the musical world. She will have the assistance on this occasion, of other eminent talent, to render still greater attractions to the entertainment.

To CORRESPONDENTS. Many favors and editorial notices are unavoidably laid over.

Spiritual Manifestations at Quincy Neck.

On Monday, Dec. 7th, 1857, as a party of three persons were seated around the table partaking of Clam Chowder, and conversing on the sad accident, whereby George B. Nightingale lost his life, to their astonishment one end of the table top started from the frame, which was secured by seven nails about three inches in length, without starting the legs from the floor. The party were one and all sceptical as regards spirit agency, and consequently somewhat startled, vacating their seats in a hurry, leaving their Chowder untouched. One of their number, however, suspecting something of the kind, hastened to a neighboring house to procure a spelling medium, requesting some of the family to return with him, in order, if possible, to find out what it all meant. On being seated a second time around the table,—which had been thus operated on, and thereby become very much weakened, it began to move so violently that it was found necessary to fasten it down as the top began to yield to the invisible power. It was then fastened down, even more secure than before, when it immediately began to respond to letters of the alphabet, spelling out the name of Wantepeck, an Indian; and also, I'm here in King Philip's time. Then the name Canabekui, was given, stating that he was here before Columbus, and that they helped white chief work.

The young man here alluded to, called White Chief, had been for some time at work reclaiming a piece of marsh land, removing the meadow-mud to the depth of three or four feet, filling up with other earth. In digging into the bank a number of small articles were found, supposed to belong to the natives, which led to the belief that it must have been an Indian camp; and also two graves, no doubt the last resting place of the ancient inhabitants. Now what power was it that pulled this table-top off when at the same time, a man was leaning on it with a weight equal to forty pounds? If any one can explain how these things were done, they will oblige many who are seeking for a solution of some of these wonderful manifestations. Some, I know, have attributed them to electricity; but can we suppose, that agent would be likely to hold a table frame to the floor, and pull the top off and spell names and other communications, thereby manifesting intelligence. Any one desiring to see the particulars can be referred to persons, knowing to the facts, by application at this office.

FIREMEN'S BALL. It will be seen by the advertisement of the Niagara Engine Co. that they will hold a "Grand Ball" on Wednesday, February 17th. They are a prime set of boys, endowed with the right spirit—ever ready at duty's call or pleasure's invitation, we have no doubt, but that the Festival will be equal to every thing which is promised.

To give variety to the entertainment, the services of that eminent son of Momus, J. H. Robinson, alias "Toodle," has been engaged, who will sing a number of his popular songs. They have our best wishes for a good time.

Marriages.

In this town, on the 30th ult., by Rev. Mr. Rice, Mr. BRYANT B. NEWCOMB to Miss EMILY A. ADAMS.

On the 31st ult., by Rev. W. W. Dean of South Boston, Mr. COLEMAN DOLE of Illinois to Miss HANNAH F. BROWN of this town.

With the above notices came liberal slices of cake. May the future of our friends be one untroubled stream of health and prosperity.

Deaths.

In this town, on the 1st inst., John W. son of Mr. Thomas O. and Mrs. Celia Pearson, aged 3 years and 4 months.

By his little sister's side
Lay sweet Johnny down to rest—
Fold his little snow white hands
Gently o'er his throbbing breast.

Lay him in his tiny clothes;
Close the weary eyelids now.
O! how calmly Johnny sleeps
Since death has kiss his baby brow.

His prattling words will never greet
His sorrowing mother's ear again;
And many a better tear will bathe
Each fond memento all in vain.

The half-worn shoes—the broken toys
Will carefully be laid aside;
And with them, too, the little bed
On which her loved and lost one died.

Dear little Johnny all that knew
The lovely child can ne'er forget
His winning voice and laughing eyes
They linger in my memory yet.

And thus it is the fairest flowers,
That deck the gardens of our love,
Are early called by death, to shed
Their fragrance in the home above.

Yet parents murmur not thou'st laid
Him in the ground but for awhile,
Beyond its portals Johnny waits
To greet thee with an angel's smile.

On the 3d inst., Mrs. Calantha, wife of Mr. Theodore W. Fowle, aged 34 years.

Interesting Exhibition.

Mr. Editor:—The exhibition on Monday evening last, by the amateur dramatic performers at North Quincy, was a very pleasant affair. The play of "Still waters run deep" was performed in a highly creditable manner, especially was the character of Mrs. Sternhold taken in a style not often excelled even by professionals—the fine rendering of many passages by Miss F., who sustained that character, called forth quite enthusiastic applause.

The performance of "Poor Pellicoddy" was, to say the least, quite amusing, and the variations by Mr. P., although not down on the bills, was well received by the company. We were also favored with some good singing and playing by a lady member of the Q. S. Club and also by Miss P. of Neponset, who seems competent to act her part towards sustaining the reputation of the family as fine vocalists.

Many thanks to the "gallant Mariner" for his attentions, and when next he acts his part may we be there to see.

PICKARD'S REGENERATOR
WILL not only restore gray hair to its original color, but will make the hair grow on BALD HEADS. Read the following letter from one of the oldest and best hair dressers in Plymouth County.
North Bridgewater, Nov. 5th, 1857.
Mr. Pickard—Sir—Your Regenerator for the hair is truly a wonderful preparation. My wife has used it for the past few months on her head.
It has caused a HEALTHY GROWTH of hair
where it was quite BALD; and it has restored the colors from GRAY to BLACK, its natural color. I have been a sufferer for twenty-five years from a falling hair, and your Regenerator is much the best restorative for the hair I have seen.
Yours,
C. TAYLOR.

has accomplished for me all that you recommended
it to. My hair is now a good color.

Salutatus.

None now can make a shortened cake
So good as could my mother,
And I think I know why it is so
As well as any other.
Because, since then some wicked men
With a kind of apparatus,
Have made a stuff the bread to puff,
And called it salutatus.

Don't ask us why so many die—
That some should live's surprising—
Since now our food is made of wood,
And salt is used for "rising."
I hope the cooks—with their good looks,
Will not exterminate us,
With cake and pie mixed up with lye,
Reduced to salutatus.

May every pot in which they've got
The stuff, be burst to atoms;
May everything in which it's been
Be minus top and bottom.
May every store on sea and shore,
(What else could more elate us?)
By fire or flood, or in the mud,
Lose all the salutatus.

And now, ye fair, I little care
What else may be the diet,
Though made of rye, and hard and dry,
The big brown loaf, I'll try it.
With cabbage "biled," and turnip piled,
You're welcome to come at us;
Yes, anything but poisoning
With blatted salutatus.

Good Bye and How-Dye-Do.

One day, Good bye met How-dye do,
Too close to shun saluting,
And soon the rival sisters drew
From kissing to disputing.

Away, cries How-dye do, your mien
Appeals my cheerful nature;
No face as dark as yours is seen
In sorrow's nomenclature.

Where'er I bring a sunshine hour,
Your cloud comes o'er to shade it;
Where'er I breathe a bosom flower,
Your midday comes to fade it.

When How-dye-do hath tuned each tongue
To hope a delightful measure,
Good-bye, in Friendship's ear hath rung
The knell of parting pleasure.

Good-bye replied, your words are true,
And well your cause you've pleaded,
But pray, who'd think of How-dye do,
Unless Good-bye preceded.

How oft, when at the court of Love,
Concurrence in the saluting,
If How-dye-do have failed to move,
Good-bye reveals the passion.

How oft, when Cupid's fire declines,
As every heart remembers,
One sigh of mine, and only mine,
Revives the dying embers.

Go bid the timid lover choose,
And I'll resign my charter,
If he for ten kind How-dye-do's,
One kind Good-bye would barter.

'Tis well the world our merit knows,
Since time there's no denying;
One half in How-dye-do goes,
And 'together in Good-bye.

A Winter Lesson.

BY THE LATE ALLEN C. SPOONER.

Before my door, in summer's heat,
Proudly the elm their branches spread;
Cool verdure sprang beneath my feet,
And shadows played around my head;
Joyful I passed the sultry hour,
And mocked the sun's meridian power.

But when with withering hand, the frost
Shrivelled the leaves, and gaunt and bare,
Their naked arms the elm-trees tossed,
While autumn tempests rent the air,
I mourned the summer's glories fled,
And pious tears of sadness shed.

When winter came, and cold and still,
The ice-king forged his frozen chain,
And over snow-clad vale and hill
Midnight assumed her solemn reign,
Forth looking from my window bars,
Through the striped limes I saw the stars.

Thus earthly loves, like summer leaves,
Gladden, but intercept our view;
But when bereft, the spirit grieves,
And hopes are crushed, and comforts few,
Lo! in the depth of sorrow's night
Beams forth from far celestial.

Anecdotes.

Do you mean to challenge any of the jury?
Whispered a lawyer to his Irish client in California.
Yea, be jabers, was the answer; if they don't acquit me I mean to challenge every spalpeen of 'em; I wants yo to give 'em a hint of it, too.

Won't you take half of this poor apple?
said a pretty damsel to a witty swain.
No, I thank you; I would prefer a better half.

The young lady blushed, and informed him with a smile, that she would think about it.

If you ever think of marrying a widow, my son, said an anxious parent to his heir, select one whose first husband was hung; that is the only way to prevent her throwing his memory in your face, and make annoying comparisons.

Even that won't prevent it, exclaimed a crusty old bachelor; she'll then praise him, and say hanging would be too good for you.

A young lady at a ball was asked by a lover of serious poetry, whether she had seen Crabbe's Tales?

Why, no; I didn't know that crabs had tails.
I beg your pardon, Miss—I mean have you read Crabbe's Tales.
I assure you, sir, I did not know that crabs, or any other, had tails.

COMPLETE
Dental Establishment.

DRS. CUMMINGS & FLAGG,
SURGEON DENTISTS,
25 Tremont Street, (up stairs) Boston.

DRS. C. & F., having had extensive experience in every branch of practical and scientific Dentistry, and being conversant with the best known methods and latest improvements in the profession, feel qualified to perform all operations in a manner highly satisfactory to patients, and reflecting credit upon themselves.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH. By the improved principle of Atmospheric Pressure, teeth, from one to an entire set, are inserted firmly and beautifully, without the use of springs or clasps. Many beautiful specimens of Plate work, on gold, silver and platinum, are on exhibition at our Rooms, which, for taste, style and durability, we believe cannot be surpassed.

EXTRACTING TEETH. In this important and difficult branch of the profession, great care is taken to render the operation the least painful. By the application of a benumbing agent to the gum, the operation is performed with comparatively little pain. This new process of extracting teeth has been in use nearly two years, and we feel confident in recommending it to our patrons and the public, as lessening in a great measure the dread which has heretofore existed, of dental operations. In some cases it entirely removes pain, while, in almost all instances, it does much to contribute to the comfort of patients. The application of ether, which is so tiresome, is administered to those who desire it.

FILLING TEETH. This is the most difficult operation the dental practitioner is ever called upon to perform. It often-times baffles the skill of operators who have been in practice many years. It is also, when well performed, the most certain and only remedy that can be applied for the cure of decayed teeth. But, it is effective, it must be executed in the most thorough and perfect manner. The preparation of a tooth, when well filled, and with suitable material, if it be afterwards kept constantly clean, may be regarded as certain. At any rate, it will never again be attacked in the same place by disease.

By the use of the new preparation of Crystalline Gold, teeth are not only arrested from decay and partially saved, but veritably restored to the form, comfort and utility of the original structure. By a wonderful property of gold, the metal, in its crystalline or precipitated state, peculiar manipulation, passes from a pulverulent to a cohesive and solid mass, the same as coin. By virtue of this remarkable property, it is made to fill the cavity of a tooth, and even to restore its shape, as substantially as if it were cast.

exact imitation of parchment; but a still better imitation has been produced almost by accident. It has been found that common unglazed paper, if immersed in a solution of sulphuric acid—three parts of water to one of acid—and suffered to remain three minutes, becomes, when taken out and washed in cold water, almost exactly like parchment. It shrinks somewhat, but it is increased eight fold in strength, while no change in its weight takes place. A number of scientific men, professional and amateur, have been experimenting on it and with the most astonishing results. It has been brought before the Academy of Natural Science and the Franklin Institute, and the accomplished gentlemen of those institutions confess that they are wholly unable to account for the change produced by this very simple process. The only thing known is that the change takes place, and that the commonest kind of paper acquires all the properties of parchment. There must be care taken in its preparation, and the paper before drying must be ironed, or calendered; but nothing else is necessary.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, Feb. 13th 1858.

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

NEPESSET BRIDGE AND WEYMOUTH AND BRAINTREE TURNPIKE CORPORATION. We call the attention of our readers to an article in our columns respecting the Neponset Bridge and Weymouth and Baintree Turnpike Corporations. The former is of the most importance to the people of Quincy. That Corporation offered to sell their franchise a year or two ago for a very reasonable sum, it being the desire of the very venerable Josiah Quincy, who holds some of the stock, and has we believe, a superintendence of its affairs, to let Quincy have a free avenue to Boston.

The subject is one of great interest to Quincy, and when we consider that the expense is to be paid out of the tolls or out of the County Treasury, and in no event by the town of Quincy, we confess that we are surprised that the act has not been put in force at an earlier period. Our market—carrying stone have to pay a large tax to the Corporation, and it behooves them to attend to the matter.

The amount of taxable property must be largely increased by the freedom of Neponset Bridge as it will open for the erection of houses in the north part of the town a large territory, unsurpassed in beauty, and salubrity, and locality, in New England.

POLICE COURT IN QUINCY. We are happy to notice that a general law is on its passage through the Legislature by which the trial of criminal cases shall be confined to special Justices. We trust this measure will put a stop to the wholesale system that has been carried on throughout the County, by which our taxes have been much increased.

The particular provisions of the law we have not yet seen, but trust it will cover the ground sufficiently to stop out of town Justices from keeping a set of jackals under pay to bring carriages for them to feed on. If not sufficient, let us have such a Police Court established as will keep good order and peace, and at the same time be free from the imputation of hatching up cases for mercenary considerations.

WASHINGTON MATTERS. Quite a fracas took place last week in the House of Representatives which terminated in a promiscuous fight. Mr. Keitt of South Carolina grabbed Mr. Grow, it is said knocked him down. Others then slashed about, and some black eyes were to be seen the next day. The House adjourned till Monday when Mr. Keitt in a handsome manner, admitted that he commenced the attack; freely confessed the corn and apologized for his conduct, which apology was graciously accepted and the business of the nation moved on like a new greased wheelbarrow.

MONUMENT FOR REV. PETER WHITNEY. We are glad to learn that according to a suggestion made some weeks ago, by one of our correspondents, subscription papers for the erection of a monument to the memory of the late Rev. Peter Whitney have been circulated in this town and in Boston.

Any one who is disposed to add to the amount already subscribed, may see one of these papers by calling at C. Gill & Co's Bookstore, and affix to it any sum, however small, which respect for this venerated pastor of half a century may dictate.

Subscribers to the Cosmopolitan Art Association are informed that the distribution of prizes is postponed until March 25th, and subscriptions are received up to that time for any who wish to become members. Additional prizes are to be added to the original list, and there will then be no postponement.

GRATIFYING INTELLIGENCE. We are happy to notice the appointment of Mr. William Baxter of this place, son of William W. Baxter, Esq., to the situation of Sub-Master in the Warren School, Charlestown, with a salary of eight hundred dollars. He was one of the class that first entered the High School in this town, where he distinguished himself as a sound scholar; and made the necessary arrangements to enter Harvard College, which he entered at the age of sixteen.

Overtaking his strength by severe application, he was compelled through ill-health, to relinquish his studies, at the end of the first year, for a time. He then commenced teaching, and although quite a young man, he has established a reputation which many older and more experienced teachers might well envy, and the selection of so young a man for so responsible a situation from so large a number of applicants, shows the estimation held of his abilities.

His example is particularly encouraging to young men, showing what perseverance and energy may accomplish in a short time; and the success that has attended his efforts must be very gratifying to his friends, as well as to those who were instrumental in establishing the High School. It was there that he first designed to obtain a collegiate education; and through that determination he may one day become an honor to the town of the Adamses and Quincys.

Such young men are an honor to any town and we may well take pride in noticing their advancement. We predict for him a brilliant future and wish him all success in his new situation.

FIREMEN'S BALL. The "Grand Firemen's Ball" to be given by the Niagara Boys of this town, will take place on Wednesday evening next, and it bids fair to be (judging from the arrangements) a most brilliant affair. The pleasures of the evening will be enhanced by the presence of Mrs. F. W. Marston, (late of Marston's Varieties) who will deliver a Fireman's Address. Also by Mr. J. H. Robinson, alias, "Toodles," of the Old National Theatre, who will display his talent in his natural and comical way. Messrs. Pratt and Marston, will also be present. Since their late visit, these gentlemen have organized a new Troupe for the ensuing summer and spring open their campaign here previous to their departure for the West. Report speaks highly favorably of an accomplished dancer, Madie, Sophia, who is engaged with this popular Company. We are confident that their success would be certain if they could be prevailed upon to make their debut in our quiet but impulsive little village.

LATE CONCERT. 'Tis oft that the sweetest melody, we pass unheeded by. Little did the absentees, who love sweet music, dream of that so inspiringly given and so warmly received by the fortunate few who were present at Miss Chapman's Concert on Tuesday evening last. It was a rich musical treat which we hope soon to see repeated.

VALENTINES Cupid has again made his annual visit. He is unloading his wares at Gill & Co's. bookstore. We think we never saw a richer assortment. There will be some bleeding hearts, we opine, if the young rogue is discreet in discharging his pointed quivers.

PROFESSOR WENTWORTH'S Concert at the Town Hall, on Wednesday evening, was a high compliment to that gentleman. The Hall was well filled, and every part of the entertainment admirably executed. The Glee Club were in fine voice—our new Band discoursing the most enlivening music, achieving new laurels, and the dance affording a most agreeable pastime. We shall refer to this affair at another opportunity.

Poetry.

The Poet's Work.

From the full street of human life,
Its jostling gains and paltry strife,
Where with man's meanness all is rife,

I hurry up heaven's viewless stairs,
And casting off earth's weary cares,
Open the pearly gate of prayer.

Behind me swing the doors again,
I hear no more the noise of men;
But far beyond my mortal ken

The forest-arches intertwine,
The stars adown each vista shine,
Swells up a wave of song divine.

I drink in all with greedy ear,
I listen with a childish fear,
My joy wells over with a tear.

Each in his place there seems to stand
In robes of light, a blessed band,
One seems to beckon with a hand:

It is a face I once loved well!
God! in that bliss ineffable
My tongue disowns earth and farewell.

As onward rolls the flood of song,
I tremble ere the words are throng,
And read the truth of right and wrong.

A hand unveils the primal laws,
I trace the end up to the cause,
Content to wait heaven's grand applause.

The world's vast history near me lies;
I scan its page with burning eyes,
A thick cloud shrouds its destinies.

Yet soft looks all around me smile,
Voices of love float down each aisle:
"Thou must begone a little while;

Meanwhile be brave, and take with thee
An earnest of life's victory,
A light across the grave dark sea."

They placed a crown upon my head,
With my heart's blood its thorns were red,
One kissed my brows, and fearful said:

"This wand of truth to thee, I lend;
A child of song, do thou befriend
Thy fellow men until the end."

Wreath the rich vintage of the mind
Around home-truths, till free and kind,
Love on the universal wind

Sweeps scorn and bitterness away;
And, as old party creeds decay,
Dawns forth a wiser, nobler day.

When truth, in robes of beauty dress'd,
Shall seek all hearts, a welcome guest,
The bride of every honest breast.

And as weid shall beneath lone sea
Awake a mystic melody,
Mortal, sing thou, what we to thee

Chant, standing on this azure height,
Of the dread voice beyond our sight,
Like many waters in its might.

Speak for the weak against the strong,
Be boldly good thy peers among,
Slain in conscience, pure of tongue.

Be kind to all, and prove to none,
In thine own home love a genial son,
So shall the hearts of all be won.

And whoso'er thy footsteps roam,
In lowly hall, or poor man's home,
Thou'lt hear the heavenly dome

Heaven's songs sink down into thy soul,
And, as earth's clouds around thee roll,
We will cure's dearest trust control.

Faith, hope and love on deathless wing
Shall bear thee up to soar and sing,
Till sorrow's dark mourning

Pass like the mists of morn away,
As o'er death's flushed and sleepless bay
Thou seest th' eternal sunbeams play.

Then lay thee down in well-spent days,
Around thy brows thy crown of bays;
Thy need no other earthly praise:

Thou hast God's message from the skies,
The light may fall on blinded eyes,
Sing on—sing on—thine never dies.

Never Part in Anger.

BY HENRY AXELING.

Never part in anger—
Mortals! ye are frail!
Soon in Death's cold languor,
Fiery cheeks may pale;
Thy foe may fade ere thou forgive;
Or thou, all, wrath, may cease to live.

Never part unkindly—
Lovers! ye are weak!
If ye utter blindly
Thoughts ye need not speak,
Go, turn your hate to pity's side,
While pity still may vanquish pride.

Never part in anger—
Mortals! thou art frail!
Soon in Death's cold languor,
Fiery cheeks may pale;
'Twill sadden all thy term of life,
To bury friend or foe in strife.

Anecdotes.

Young man, do you know what relation You sustain in this world? said a minister to a young member of the church.
Yes, said the hopeful convert—two cousins and a grandmother; but I don't intend to sustain them much longer.

A poor Irishman seeing a crowd of people approaching, asked "what is the matter?"
He was answered, a man was going to be buried.
O! replied he, I'll stop to see that, for we carry them to be buried in our country.

Sammy, why don't your mother mend that rip in your trousers?
O! she's gone to the sewing circle, to make clothes for poor children!

You have broken the Sabbath, Johnny,
said a good man to his son.
Yes, said his little sister, and mother's long comb, too, in three pieces!

COMPLETE DENTAL ESTABLISHMENT.

DRS. CUMMINGS & FLAGG.

SURGEON DENTISTS.

25 Tremont Street, (op stairs.) Boston.

DRS. C. & F., having had extensive experience in every branch of practical and scientific Dentistry, and being conversant with the best known methods and latest improvements in the profession, feel qualified to perform all operations in a manner highly satisfactory to patients,
and reflecting credit upon themselves.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH. By the improved principle of Atmospheric Pressure, teeth, from one
to an entire set, are inserted firmly and beautifully, without the use of springs or clasps. Many beautiful specimens of Plate Work, on gold,
silver and platinum, are on exhibition at our Rooms, which, for taste, style and durability,
we believe cannot be surpassed.

EXTRACTING TEETH. In this important
and difficult branch of the profession, great care
is taken to render the operation the least painful. By the application of a benumbing agent to
the gum, the operation is performed with comparatively little pain. This new process of extracting teeth has been in use nearly two years,
and we feel confident in recommending it to our
patients and the public, as lessening in a great measure the dread which has heretofore existed
of dental operations. In some cases it entirely removes pain, while, in almost all instances, it
does much to contribute to the comfort of patients. The application of ether, which is entirely painless, is administered to those who desire it.

FILLING TEETH. This is the most difficult operation the dental practitioner is ever called upon to perform. It often-times baffles the skill of operators who have been in practice
many years. It is also, when well performed,
the most certain and only remedy that can be applied for the cure of decayed teeth. But, it is effective, it must be executed in the most thorough and perfect manner. The preservation of a tooth, when well filled, and with suitable
material, if it be afterwards kept constantly clean, may be regarded as certain. At an appoint, it will never again be attacked in the same place by disease.

By the use of the new preparation of Crysta-
lized Gold, teeth are not only arrested from decay, and partially saved, but veritably restored to the firm, comfort and utility of the original structure. By a wonderful property of gold, the metal, in its crystalline or precipitated state, by peculiar manipulation, passes from a pulverulent
to a cohesive and solid mass, the same as coin silver, and of this remarkable property, it is made to fill the cavity of a tooth, and even to restore
its shape, as substantially as if it were cast.

The proprietors of this complete dental establishment will always be pleased to give their advice on the cure and preservation of the teeth of children and adults, and the result of their long experience in cases requiring the opinion of practical scientific dentists.

Hall's Great
SCROFULAR REMEDY.

THIS Purely Vegetable Preparation is pleasant
and agreeable to the taste, and simple in its action, causing neither vomiting or purging. It acts directly upon the primary cause of scrofular disease, the blood, and removes all vitiated elements, giving a healthy action to the Liver, and a correct tone to the stomach. It overcomes that feeling of languor which is often experienced in the Spring and Summer, and removes and restores the vital energy and Physical Strength.

In a host of cases of Scrofula and Scrofular disease, such as Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Scald Head, Tumors, Ulcers, Bronchitis, Asthma, Coughs, Inflammatory Rheumatism, Fever,
Sores, White Swelling, Dropsy, Boils, Barber's Itch, Piles, Old Sores, and all diseases which manifest themselves by Eruptions on the Skin, it has been used with the most gratifying success, after every other known remedy has been tried and failed to afford relief.

It is also an effective cure for Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Flatulency, Costiveness and Derangement of the Urinary Organs.

It is an infallible remedy for irregularities and other diseases peculiar to FEMALES, such as Weakness and Pain in the Back, Strangury, Affections of the Kidneys, Palpitation of the Heart, Dizziness and Headache.

It can be given with perfect safety and most desirable results in all cases, to any person from infancy to old age.

Made and sold by WM. SMITH HALL, Sole Proprietor, Quincy, Mass., to whom all orders must be addressed.

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

THE AGONY. A number of this pretty little sheet is now before us. Its columns are well filled with articles, principally selected, affording a variety of pleasing and instructive reading. It is neatly got up, and is a gem in the literary world of much merit. Its publication is credited we perceive to the students in rhetoric in our High School. We like its appearance much, and hope our young friends will meet with sufficient encouragement to cheer them on in their enterprise. It will ever be our aim to deserve their esteem, we therefore respectfully solicit an exchange.

THE FIREMEN'S BALL, which has been some time in preparation, came off at the Town Hall, on Wednesday evening last. It was well attended, the Company being fully represented on the occasion, with many other of our citizens. About ninety couple were present. Walker, with his excellent band of musicians were there, and the dance under his management was kept up until early dawn. The supper was furnished in the Lyceum room below; the tables presenting a most inviting appearance. Taken all in all, it was as happy and social a gathering as have come together during the season. Highly creditable to the Niagara boys, and satisfactory to the numerous participants.

Among the distinguished gentlemen present, we noticed our old friend and veteran fireman, Capt. Lucas, of Independence Engine Company, No. 3, of North Bridgewater; Capt. Allen, of Torrent, No. 6, of Roxbury; Capt. Warren, of Hook and Ladder, No. 3, of Boston; Capt. Milliken, of Eagle Engine, No. 3, and Capt. Rumery, of Extinguisher, No. 5, of Boston. Members were also in attendance from the above companies.

The delivery of the Firemen's Address by Mrs. Marston, was admirably done, and elicited much applause. Marston and Pratt were also there to add to the general amusement.

Of our Fire Department we observed Capt. Parker, of Engine Co., No. 2, and Capt. Newcomb, of Hook and Ladder No. 1, and also, our most excellent Chief Engineer, Capt. French, with other individuals, friends of the Firemen.

Our thanks are particularly due to Capt. Hunt, of the Niagara, a worthy and upright member of our Fire Department; to Capt. Rumery of Boston, whom Nature in her freaks made small in stature, but endowed with a large soul; to C. W. Perry, also to others, whose names we will not here mention. Particulars in full in our next.

WASHINGTON'S BIRTH DAY. This event will be celebrated on Monday next, by the Hancock Light Guards in the following interesting manner: A salute will be fired morning, noon and night; and the day closed with a ball at the Town House. The evening's entertainments will open with some rich Tableaux, manual of arms by the Company; after which the Guards will unite and join with their civic friends in the merry dance. Every arrangement has been made for a good time and to render suitable honors to the memory of the illustrious dead.

Our patriotic ladies, we hope will not forget our military friends on this occasion, but contribute their mite, by sending in refreshments, in order that a bounteous table may be spread. There is no day in our calendar, which commands itself more strongly to every American for their respect and observance than the birth day of the Father of the Country.

ACCIDENT. On Tuesday evening last, Mr. Harry Harrington, while returning to his home, was brutally assaulted by ruffians, and in the melee was knocked down, causing a fracture of the bones of the right leg, which will confine him to his house for months. He is a worthy citizen, and commands the esteem of the community.

KEROSENE LAMP. A new article, recently introduced into this community, which is spoken of very highly, for economy, safety, and many other excellent qualities. We have seen one burning in one of our public resorts, which emits a clear, rich, mellow light, and we were assured that the experiment thus far had equalled the promise, of being at least one third cheaper than any other known substance used for such purposes. It may be had of N. B. Fernald, on Washington street, who is the sole agent for this town.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN'S FURNISHING GOODS. Mr. Loud, recently from Weymouth, it will be seen has taken central location, occupied by the late G. B. Nightingale, and has furnished it with a new stock of goods, to which we would call especial attention.

Mr. L. is a young man, of pleasing address, (having on a previous occasion, secured a right to citizenship and its immunities,) our citizens, therefore, who may be in want of goods in his line may be sure to meet with a welcome and courteous reception.

FOSTER BROWN,
C. L. BADGER, }

OUR NEW SALOON on the corner of Washington and Coddington streets, is an improvement which comes up to the progressive spirit of the age. It is central, pleasant, possessing many advantages not to be had in the old. Mr. French has made a considerable outlay to render the place every way acceptable to the public, and an agreeable resort to his numerous friends. His refreshment department has received many additions, enabling him to serve families and others, at the shortest notice, with his delicious Chowders. An oyster one, served up in his unrivalled manner, will be in readiness to-day.

For the Patriot.
Reduction of Fare.

MR. EDITOR:—A petition addressed to the officers of the Old Colony Rail Road has been in circulation during the past week asking for a reduction of the fares from this and other localities to Boston. The charge for travelling over this road between Boston and Quincy is higher than any other road out of the city. Three cents a mile is the extent to which rail road directors have thought proper to demand, as a higher rate, especially from villages at a short distance from Boston, would drive people to the use of private vehicles. This fact is well understood by rail road managers, and they govern themselves accordingly. Then how is it that the fare is higher on the Old Colony Rail Road, (nearly four cents per mile) than on other roads? This is a question for the consideration of the people! The Old Colony road will not reduce its fares so long as they can demand thirty cents between Quincy and Boston, and there is no cheaper way to get between these two places. The Old Colony road is enabled to charge this high fare because we have no free road to Boston; and until we have such a free road it is almost idle to ask them to reduce the price of their tickets. Many efforts have been made to reduce or abolish the tolls of Neponset Bridge, but the attempt has always been met by the resistance of sectional, the selfish, or by those who are adverse to the prosperity of the town.

One year since the Legislature passed an act which would enable the County Commissioners to lay out the Neponset Bridge and Turnpike as a free road. This act was made dependent upon the vote of the inhabitants of Quincy, and yet the Selectmen have neglected to insert a warrant in the Town meetings, and the people have had no opportunity to accept the act.

An effort has been lately made to get an article inserted in the next Town meeting warrant, for the purpose of attesting the question whether we desire to have Neponset Bridge free or not, (with what success as yet we cannot tell as we have not seen the warrant), and if the subject can be got before the Town, the act will doubtless be accepted, and the bridge made free: especially as it can be done without the cost of a single dollar to the Town of Quincy—except the keeping in repair the road between Quincy village and Neponset Bridge; an immaterial expense. But, whether immaterial or not, it is an expense that the Town ought to assume in consideration of the travel which passes over it by our people, and further in consideration of the large amount of taxes paid by the inhabitants of the North District, whose estates would be vastly enhanced in value by the freedom of Neponset Bridge.

PUBLIC GOOD.

PRIZE BOX. We noticed in one of the California papers, the Target Excursion of the Mechanics Guards of San Francisco, and among the Corporals, the name of Cornelius O'Connor, son of Michael O'Connor, of this town, who won the first prize of a silver goblet. The shooting says our California contemporary, on this occasion, was indeed excellent; out of forty-three men who fired, at a distance of sixty yards, forty-one shots pierced the target, four hitting the bull's eye.

THE DRAMA. The Town Hall was well filled last evening to witness the performance of 'Marston's New Company.' The old favorites, Messrs. Marston and Pratt, and Mrs. E. W. Marston were heartily received, while the new ones, Cavanah and Watson, gave convincing proof that they were artists of ability. The Danesue, Mlle Sophie, was decidedly the best that has ever performed here. This is the last night of the Company. Give them a bumper at parting.

MONUMENT FOR REV. PETER WHITNEY. We are glad to learn that according to a suggestion made some weeks ago, by one of our correspondents, subscription papers for the erection of a monument to the memory of the late Rev. Peter Whitney have been circulated in this town and in Boston.

Any one who is disposed to add to the amount already subscribed, may see one of these papers by calling at C. Gill & Co.'s Bookstore, and affix to it any sum, however small, which respect for this venerated pastor of half a century may dictate.

Elegiac Stanzas

On the sudden and melancholy death of George W. Mellor, who was drowned in South Bay, Jan. 21st, 1858.

BY MARY J. SANBORN.

Farewell dear George a long farewell,
On earth we meet no more,
For thou hast passed from home away
To an immortal shore.

We miss thee when the morning sun
Its rosy radiance throws—
We miss thy footsteps when the day
Is drawing to its close.

But sad are our thoughts as we turn away,
And think that our loved one is dead;
No mother to smooth his dying couch,
Nor sisters to watch by his bed.

His cheeks were the rosy tints of health—
How beamed in his bright blue eye—
No lingering disease had weakened his frame
When he went from his home to die.

Ah! little we thought as he left his home
And glided so smoothly away,
That the wings of death's angel should flap
In his path.

And the grave should so near him lay.
But hark! there's a cry like a funeral knell,
Which falls on the listening ear—
'Tis the voice of our loved one within the cold wave;

And no hand that could aid him is near.
Oh deep is our grief that thy spirit has fled,
That on earth thy short journey is o'er;
But we feel thou hast gone to those mansions above,

To be troubled with grief never more.
Alas the proud waters! how oft with delight
We have gazed on the sparkling wave,
But since in thy depths his lamp has gone out,
Thou wearest the gleam of the grave.

His home on the earth is a sorrowful home;
No tongue his deep anguish can tell
The heart that is wounded God's goodness can heal.

He doth think wisely and well
Oh hushed is the voice whose musical notes
Filled our hearts with the spirit of love;
Yet though silent on earth his joyous refrain
Is heard in the choirs above.

Dear parents, weep not for the child that is lost,
His sorrows and troubles are o'er;
The bark that was lost in the dark sea of earth.

Is safely moored on Eternity's shore.

Confidence and Credit.

The day was dark, the markets dull,
The Change was thin, gazettes were full,
And half the town was breaking;
The counterpane of cash was "Step,"
Bankers and bankrupts met up shop,
And honest hearts were aching.

When near the Change, my fancy spied
A faded form, with hasty stride,
Beneath grief's burthen stooping;
Her name was Credit, and she said,
Her father, Trade, was lately dead,
Her mother, Commerce, drooping.

The smile that she wore to wear
Was withered by the hand of care,
Her eyes had lost their lustre;
Her character was gone, she said,
For basely she had been betrayed,
And nobody would trust her.

That honest industry had tried
To gain fair Credit for his bride,
And found the lady willing;
But ah! a fortune hunter came,
And Speculation was his name,
A rake not worth a shilling.

The villain was on mischief bent,
He gained both dad and maid's consent,
And then poor Credit snarled;
He fished her fortune and her fame,
He fixed a blot upon her name,
And left her broken hearted.

While thus poor Credit seemed to sigh,
Her cousin, Confidence, came by,
(Methinks he must be clever),
For when he whispered in her ear,
She checked the sigh, she dried the tear,
And smiled as sweet as ever.

Anecdotes.

A fellow was invited to a party one evening where there was music, both vocal and instrumental. On the following morning he met one of the guests, who said,—

Well, how did you enjoy yourself last night? Were not the quartettes excellent? Well, really, I can't say, and he, for I did not taste them; but the pork chops were the finest I ever ate.

A ragged and weather-beaten loafer crawled in before the fire in a public-house, and seating himself began to cough tremendously. Mister, said a by-stander, you have got a cold.

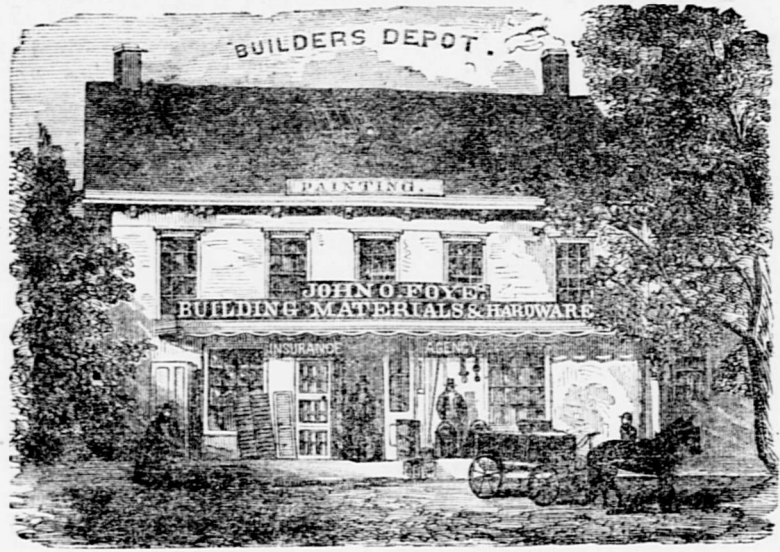

Have I, said the other, 'pon my honor I'm glad of it: I'm so wretched poor it's a consolation to get anything.

Can you tell me what becomes of old horses? asked a man of an investigating turn of mind of another named George, lately in the lively line.

Why, said George, thoughtfully, shutting his left eye, the final end of 'em is, that they get traded off!

Why don't you limit yourself said a physician to an intemperate person set down a stake that you will go so far and no further. So I do, said the toper; but I set it so far off that I always go drunk before I get to it.

Pure Potash

IN TIN CANS.

B. T. BABBITT,

68 & 70 Washington Street, N. Y.,

And 38 India Street, Boston.

THE Proprietor of this POTASH has for many years been the necessity of having a reliable standard for the strength of POTASH. The adulteration has become so general, that it has, notwithstanding its valuable properties, nearly lost its name. The Proprietor has taken the responsibility of ascertaining his name to every package, and warrants the strength to be uniform, and when used always producing the same results. Potash many times is adulterated with salt, which is destructive in making soap; it makes the ladies say they did not have good soap, &c. One other reason that Potash has gone out of use, is, it is so unpleasant to handle, being put in wooden casks, and becoming a liquid in many cases, and very troublesome to the retailers.

Now the Proprietor first obtains pure Potashes, always being the same strength, and producing the same results; and will warrant it in all cases, if the directions are followed, to produce double the effect of adulterated Potash. The Proprietor has taken the responsibility of ascertaining his name to every package, and warrants the strength to be uniform, and when used always producing the same results. Potash many times is adulterated with salt, which is destructive in making soap; it makes the ladies say they did not have good soap, &c. One other reason that Potash has gone out of use, is, it is so unpleasant to handle, being put in wooden casks, and becoming a liquid in many cases, and very troublesome to the retailers.

For the Patriot.
Auditors' Report.

MR. EDITOR: I should like the privilege if you have no objection, of making a few plain statements of facts concerning the town expenses the past year as given by the official Report.

First, Schooling: We should like to know in what manner, or by what means, over one hundred tons of coal could be consumed during the few months of the year it is required by our schools, at the expense of $729.39? Then, again, how could the Centre School use $91.92 more coal than the Adams or Willard? Each of these school houses are of the same size as the Coddington, and contain equally as many school rooms. We have heard the reason assigned, that the furnace was not properly fitted up. Who put it up? and why was it not put up in a proper manner?

The sum of two hundred and twenty dollars and fifty-five cents for building fires, we think, a needless expenditure, and could very well be dispensed with. We know very well when we went to school, we had to take our turn with the rest in building fires. I thought the custom good then, and I think it ought to be in use now. But young America thinks otherwise. It is not genteel—it is below par, for these times.

The sum expended for schooling this year, exceeds the whole amount of money raised by taxation for town expenses in 1843-4, by $2,857.20. The amount raised that year was $8,588.94; after paying all the bills for schooling, almshouse, highways, &c., there remained in the Treasury, $351.27, the town expenses that year were more than usual, as the school house in the West District was enlarged and remodelled and those in the other Districts painted. This statement is more curious than important, perhaps. But it shows a strange contrast. We have no hesitation in saying that business was more prosperous in this town in the year 1844, than the past year.

The amount of $5,270.90 for Engine expenses seems small to those who vote the money, but the tax payers tell another story, and at the next town meeting we hope they will act accordingly.

Almshouse Establishment. By the Report we see the amount of merchandise bought at the Dry Goods and Grocer's Stores for the above house last year, was $670.90, this year, $806.54; making the excess over 1856-7, for merchandise, $105.84; (it will be borne in mind that the inmates of the house last year were 14, this year 12.) The amount expended for meat the present year is $467.34; last $355.37, exceeding what was paid last year for the same article $111.94. Excess for the above merchandise and meat over last year $220.78; making the amount one quarter greater than last year. When we take into consideration that all articles of consumption, are about one quarter less than last year, the natural inference would be that the expenses would decrease in the same ratio; but instead of decreasing, they have increased about one quarter, making a difference of about one half. The cost for the inmates of the Almshouse in this town the past year, is over one dollar per week more for each individual, than in Dorchester, Weymouth and other adjoining towns.

The amount of meat used at the Almshouse the past year at twelve cents per pound, would allow each of the inmates a fraction over one pound per day, — for each day in the year—deducting one fish day. Pork is not included in this estimate. Now we would ask how many robust and hard working men are there in this town who can average one pound of meat per day the year round; much less must it be expected of the aged and infirm members of this institution. We think this shows conclusively there is mismanagement in the administration of the Almshouse affairs. Notwithstanding all the ox and horse carts, &c., brought in to balance accounts.

The system of niggardly favoritism that was commenced a year or two ago, has exhibited itself more plainly this year than ever. The coal was principally bought of one firm. The merchandise of a few favorite stores. While others, whose stores are centrally located, were entirely neglected, and some who pay a higher tax than any of the above mentioned stores, received little or nothing. We have no doubt but that we can go to those stores who have been passed by and purchase goods ten per cent cheaper than they can be bought at some of the stores that were so liberally patronized. We should say, it was no more than right, just and honorable, that each store should share equally the spoils of the town.

When the Almshouse was erected in 1815, the expense for painting was $100, this year $161.31. The material was much higher when the house was built than now. This fact I state from a price current taken from a Boston paper of the above year.

The great number of back bills of 1856, that were paid this year, seem to cause some conversation and comment. It looks a little singular, but probably they can be satisfactorily explained.

The Auditors of last year in their Report, say, that the town debt at the time they made their account was $30,700.76. The Auditors this year tell us that the actual debt at that time was $32,057.76. If this statement is correct, why was it not stated to the town at the proper time? not covered up and then brought before them a year hence. If matters are to be transacted in this manner the town will never know where they stand.

Some of the honorable Board of Selectmen think the system of Auditing town accounts rather a deception. No wonder! When such items as these are brought to light reflecting no great credit upon their administrative abilities for transacting town business.

We hope for the welfare and interest of the town, and its ancient renown, that judicious and suitable individuals will be selected to conduct the municipal affairs of Quincy the coming year.

Boiled Corned Beef

This is a staple of food in a majority of families during several months in the year, and in most cases the cooking may be greatly improved. The two chief errors, are, first in not cooking it long enough, and second in losing a large proportion of its real nutriment. We always prefer it prepared as follows:—Soak in warm, not hot water, just long enough to take out all excess of salt. Then cover it so that the steam will condense upon the underside of the cover, and fall back. This will prevent boiling away, and also the loss of much of the nutriment which goes with the steam. Boil the meat several hours, or until it is so thoroughly done that it will not hold together to be lifted with a fork. If there be any bones, take them out, since if cooked enough the meat will cleave from them readily. Pack the meat by itself in a deep dish, mixing well together the lean and fat portions. Next skin the fat and boil the liquor down, so that when poured over the meat it will just fill the spaces between the pieces. Then lay over the whole a flat cover which will fit it into the dish, put on a dozen or twenty pounds weight, and let it stand until cold.—Several flat irons or a large stone will answer for the weight, or, if convenient, it may be set under a cheese-press. Prepared in this way, the poorest piece of tough corned beef will be made tender and juicy. Boiling down and using the liquid, saves the most nutritious portion, which is usually thrown away. The gelatine of the condensed gravy, when cold, forms a solid mass with the meat, which may then be cut into slices for serving upon the table. If the fat and lean portions be mixed, when cut cold the pieces will present a beautiful marble appearance. Corned beef prepared in this way will not only be eaten with a superior relish, but will not, on account of its toughness, be swallowed half masticated: it produces irritation in the stomach, and yields only a portion of its substance as nutriment. Over the common process, there is only the extra trouble of the additional boiling and pressing, which are amply repaid by the saving of nutriment, while a cheaper quality of beef will be rendered wholesome and profitable. Try this mode and you will not willingly go back to the hard boiling "inevitable salt junk."

Mutton cooked in the above manner is very nice.—American Agriculturist.

The Rind of Fruit Indigestible.

This applies to all fruit, without exception, and includes also the pellicle or skin of kernels and nuts of all kinds. The edible part of fruit is particularly delicate, and liable to rapid decomposition if exposed to the atmosphere; it is, therefore, a provision of nature to place a strong and impervious coating over it, as a protection against accident, and to prevent insect enemies from destroying the seed within. The skin of all the plum tribe is wonderfully strong, compared with its substance, and resists the action of water and many solvents in a remarkable manner. If not thoroughly masticated before taken into the stomach, the rind of plums is rarely, if ever, dissolved by the gastric juice. In some cases, pieces of it adhere to the coats of the stomach, the same as wet paper clings to anything, causing sickness and other inconvenience. Dried raisins and currants are particularly included in these remarks, showing the best reasons for placing the fruit upon the chopping-board with the suet in substance, and for if a dried current passes into the stomach whole, it is never digested at all. When horses eat oats or beans that have not been through a crushing mill, much of his food is swallowed whole, and in this state being perfectly indigestible, the husk or pellicle resisting the power of the stomach, there is so much loss of nutriment. Birds, being destitute of teeth, are provided with the apparatus for grinding their seed, namely, the gizzard, through which the seed passes, and is crushed prior to digestion. The peelings of apples or pears should always be cast away. Oranges we need not mention, as this is always done. Orleans, greenpeas, damsons, and all plums should be carefully skinned if eaten raw, and if put in tarts, they should be crushed before cooking. Nuts are as indigestible as we could desire, if the brown skin be not removed or blanched, as almonds are generally treated.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, Feb. 27th 1858.

"BURN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

THE TWENTY-SECOND was honored by the Hancock Light Guards by every demonstration suited to the occasion. The day was ushered in by a salute of thirty-one guns, the number of States, and the ringing of bells—which were repeated at noon and at sun-set. The Town Hall had been tastefully decorated, receiving its military decorations for the evening's entertainments. The day and the attractions brought out the largest assemblage of the season. The evening was clear and pleasant; with a bright smiling moon overhead, and the sleighing, although not the best, on account of its novelty, added a new excitement to the scene. At an early hour, our streets were alive with citizens, wending their way towards the Hall; and by nine o'clock, the place was crowded to overflowing, as many at least as eight or nine hundred being present. Quite too many for comfort, or to carry out in full the wishes of the Committee. Among the assemblage, we observed many distinguished guests from abroad, military and others. The tableaux, about a dozen in number, were well got up, the characters were well personated, reflecting many a true picture in every-day life. The Manuel of arms, by the Guards, was an achievement highly complimentary to the Company, and well received by the audience. Dancing was next introduced, with a band of musicians of unsurpassed excellence, which was kept up until the morning's Reveille summoned the happy party to their homes.

We trust the day is not far distant when the anniversary of the birth day of Washington will be set apart and consecrated for national observance.

THE DRAMA. The late visit of Mr. Moran was not quite so successful, in a pecuniary point of view, as on a former occasion. This first night of his performance was well attended, and gave general satisfaction, his new Company meeting with a most cordial reception. But the second night, was the great snow storm, and people chose the comforts of their own firesides rather than go abroad in search of amusements. It was somewhat of a disappointment to our citizens. But may be rectified by renewing the visit.

NEW TAILORING ESTABLISHMENT. Mr. Moran has taken a room over the extensive Dry Goods Establishment of our friend Packard, corner of Hancock and Granite streets, where he intends to carry on the tailoring business in all its various branches. Mr. M. comes to us well recommended—with large experience—the best of facilities, and with a disposition to accommodate those who may favor him with their patronage, on the most liberal terms. Look in and judge for yourselves.

QUINCY LYCEUM. The last of the Winter course of lectures before this favorite Institution was delivered by Dr. Thayer, son of Gideon F. Thayer, Esq., of Boston. It was pronounced one of the best lectures of the season.

At the close of the lecture, Wm S. Morton, Esq., moved a vote of thanks to those gentlemen who have lectured gratuitously before the Lyceum during the Winter, which was unanimously passed. The gentlemen whose names are subjoined, we believe have delivered free lectures, viz:—Dr. Henry M. Saville, Edward Buck, Esq., Rev. Charles Skinner, Rev. Luther Rice, and Gideon F. Thayer, Esq.

THE STATE LIQUOR AGENCY. It is stated by the Boston Transcript that the profits of the State liquor agency, established in 1855, are treble the salary of the Chief Justice of the Commonwealth, and that it is averred that inferior liquors are furnished by the agency. The Journal replies that the liquors have been analyzed by the State assayers of Massachusetts and Rhode Island, and found to be pure, and that the State temperance committee have endorsed the State agent, and have confidence in him. The Legislature however has appointed a committee to investigate the subject.

STATE DOCUMENTS. We are indebted to some one at head quarters,—probably the Secretary of State,—for a pile of documents, including reports from all, or nearly all the benevolent institutions in the Commonwealth.

NEW VOLUME. T. B. Peterson & Brothers have just published another volume of Tales and Sketches by the late Mrs. Caroline Lee Hentz, entitled "The Lost Daughter, and other Stories of the Heart." "Aunt Patty's Scrap-Bag," the longest novelle of the volume, attracted much notice, upon its first publication in the magazines. The volume of three hundred pages will be sent by mail for $1.25 in cloth, or $1.00 in paper covers.

Democratic Meeting.

At a meeting of the Democrats of Quincy, held on Tuesday evening last, the following Resolutions were submitted to the meeting, and by them unanimously adopted, viz:

Resolved, That we, the Democrats of Quincy, in meeting assembled, do hereby renew our undiminished confidence in the administration of James Buchanan, whose acts are in full accordance with the principles of Democracy as promulgated by the several National Democratic Conventions, and especially his recent conciliatory Message, relative to the admission of Kansas into our glorious Union.

Resolved, That as true friends to the prosperity and welfare of the Town of Quincy, we cordially pledge ourselves to use all fair and honorable means on Monday next, to free the tolls on Neponset Bridge and Weymouth Turnpike, making this great thoroughfare from our pleasant village to the metropolis of New England a free highway as far as this town is concerned.

For the Patriot.

The Niagara Engine Company's Ball.

The Ball given by the Niagara Engine Company on the evening of the 17th, was the most successful ever given by the Company. The Hall was splendidly decorated with flags, streamers, mottoes and Firemen's Emblems.

About eighty couple sat down to a supper provided by the Company, which was a credit to them.

A large number of Fire Companies were represented, including Eagle No. 3, Extinguisher No. 5, Tiger No. 7, and Franklin Hook and Ladder No. 3, of Boston; Torrent No. 6 of Roxbury; Independence No. 5 of North Duxbury; Tiger No. 9, and Hook and Ladder No. 1, of Quincy.

Chief Engineer French with his smiling face led off the grand March in his best style.

Among the fair ladies we noticed the Misses P., A., M., N., D., with others that were dressed with great taste. Among the beaux, were the popular Commander, First Assistant, Clerk, F., S., S., L., with many particular friends. Among the fancy dancers we noticed many that done credit to themselves. Among whom were Mrs. M., Misses F., P., H., A., Messrs F., S., M., K., F., &c.

The music provided by Walker's Band was certainly fine, and the selections by the prompter made with a taste which showed him proficient.

The whole affair was managed by those who knew how, and our desire is that another may soon be held that all may attend, and see, and enjoy themselves. A DANCER.

For the Patriot.

The Democracy—Always right.

MR. EDITOR: We were highly gratified to perceive that the Democracy of Quincy, at their late meeting, responded so unanimously to the sentiments of the President in relation to the affairs of Kansas. The sober, second thought of the people, is fast coming round to the support of that measure. Even the actual settlers of that Territory, it is said, regret already the course which they have pursued in opposing the General Government; and that a majority of the Free State Men are anxious to be admitted at once into the Union under the Lecompton Constitution. Why then should not their wishes be promptly answered? It is the only Constitutional and peaceable way in which it can be done. Has not our manufactures and trade suffered enough already by the agitation of this vexed and unprofitable subject? Is it judicious, as a large manufacturing people, to live in open warfare, with those who wish to be on friendly terms with us, and who are our best customers. What say you, brother Mechanics, is it for our interest any longer to encourage the ambitious designs of interested demagogues, which is falling with such crushing weight upon our labor? In some trades, the wages have already been reduced one third; with a still downward tendency. The community has likewise an interest in the matter; for it is driving our best artisans and mechanics abroad, into more favored regions. Think of this, and whether it is not time to look to our own interest, rather than the interest of those who are willing to let the Union slide, for the small consideration of seven hundred dollars.

A NATIONAL DEMOCRAT.

CHANGE IN BUSINESS. J. M. Goodhue, of Weymouth Landing, it will be perceived by his advertisement, has taken the whole of that large establishment into his own hands, having recently bought out Mr. Jackson, his late partner, who has commenced business in Boston. The business will be conducted as heretofore. The largest and best assortment of Dry Goods always on hand, and at the lowest cash prices.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE. The March number of Harper, is received from A. Williams & Co., Boston through C. Gill & Co., agent. The "Upper Mississippi" and "Tropical Journeys" are the subjects of its illustrated sketches. Thackeray's "Virginians," with the genuine illustrations, is continued.

BLOOD PURIFIER. We would again call attention to this excellent compound, prepared by Dr. Newcomb, on Hancock street. It is a sure preventive for the numerous complaints which people are subject to in this climate as the spring opens. Keep your blood pure and disease will fly from you. The Dr., besides other valuable medicines, has connected with his Dispensary a literary department. He is quite a connoisseur in such matters; all orders, therefore, for periodicals, books, etc., will be promptly and faithfully attended to.

ANOTHER CONCERT. It is with no small degree of pleasure that we are able to announce to the citizens of Quincy the engagement of Miss Chapman to repeat her Concert at the Town Hall on Wednesday evening next. Her appearance on a former occasion was made under many disadvantages. Unknown to the community in her profession, and local attractions, of a different kind, intervening, her audience was not in numbers, what she had a right to expect. Still, those that were there, (and there were many of our best judges in such matters present) pronounced the performance one of unsurpassed beauty and excellence. Miss Chapman has a sweet, and powerful soprano voice, excelled by few. Nature has endowed her with a faculty, highly cultivated, which takes the senses captive and carries away our feelings in the most rapturous delight. We repeat, that the Concert advertised in another column, will be one of no ordinary kind. That our citizens may rely on a rich musical treat.

FRENCH'S SALOON. We are authorized to say, by Mr. French, that all orders for his Chordwell will be answered after 12 o'clock to-day. Also, that on Monday next, March meeting day, he shall make ample provision to entertain the young masses who shall come up to the polls to vote.

Napoleon, to provide for France in the event of his death, during his son's minority, has appointed a Council of Regency, with Eugene as Regent.

The Boston Post has ascertained that one of the "heaviest firms" in Union street, in that city, does not weigh two hundred pounds.

Chief Justice Nelson of the Supreme Court has been removed to the McLean Insane Asylum, for reason of insanity produced by illness.

Deaths.

In this town, on the 23d inst., Millard F. son of Mr. Albion P. and Mrs. Sarah A. Wright, aged 1 year 6 months.

Oh dry those tears of grief
Your cherub's now at rest;
Its weary bed is pillowed
Upon its Saviour's breast.

Its sufferings now are o'er,
And all is pain has ceased;
And now it lives in heaven,
Where all is joy and peace.

He dwells in fairer climes,
Where death can never come;
And could you hear that voice,
'Twould speak in joyful tones:

Saying—father, mother, come
And dwell with me above;
For here there is no sorrow,
But all is joy and love.

On the 24th inst., Lizzie B., daughter of Mr. Israel W. and Mrs. Pricilla L. Munroe, aged 14 years, 4 months and 14 days.

The officers and members of the Niagara Engine Co. No. 1, of Quincy, return their sincere thanks for the many favors received at the Ball on the 17th, to Messrs. Abercrombie, Briesler, Packard and Newcomb, for particular favors received at their hands; to the Ladies for their donations we feel under obligations which we shall repay at our first opportunity; also to the Ladies who so kindly volunteered their services while at supper we feel under lasting obligation, and can merely say—"Ladies, we thank you"; and last, though not least, to the gentlemen who took charge of the clothing, we reciprocate such favors and may the time soon come when we can repay.

A BOOK FOR THE MILLION. Just published by FEDERHEN & Co., Booksellers and Stationers, No. 13 Court Street, Boston, a Brief Treatise of 48 pages, on Diseases of the Sexual System of both sexes—their symptoms and treatment—prepared by a physician of the Boston Eclectic Hospital. This work also contains a scathing exposure of the deception and imposture practiced by advertising quacks, with some of their names and locations. Sold by periodical dealers generally. Auditors Report.

THE following errors occur in the printed copy of the Auditors Report.

Page 6.—Bill of G. H. Locke is $17.50 too large. Page 10.—The bill of E. S. Fellows was $28.33 and others $21.32, being 9.02 too small. Page 12.—Bill of Daniel Baxter should be $23.34, being 60 cents too large in the book. Page 20.—Bill of N. M. Bean is $1 too large. Page 25.—Repairs on Town Buildings is carried forward $19 too small. The difference between these errors is eight cents, consequently there is another error of that amount in some other bill. We observe that Mr. G. H. Locke, Sub-Committee for the Millard School, has approved a bill which is $5 more than was due at the time it was paid. We presume it was through mistake and that he will see that it is made right next quarter.

The Auditors left the original report with the chairman to copy for the printer, and he is to blame for the errors.

S. MORSE, Jr., Chairman.

Affection.

Of old, a spade was a spade,
By simple and by sage;
A workman did his honest work,
And servants earned their wages.
A man was true of word,
Whenever virtue named it;
There was but one of higher worth,
And lovely woman claim'd it.
But now we masquerade with words—
The truth a great offence is—
And deprecate our mother tongue,
By pride and false pretences.

We shame the language of our sires,
We talk so mild and meekly;
We've operators for working men;
And draw our salaries weekly;
Our lady takes the name of wife,
That word so true and hearty;
And every man's a gentleman,
Unless we call him party.
The shopman hates the name of shop,
And by perversion later,
The man who digs a railway trench
Is called a navigator.

O, give me back our honest speech!
It had a soul of beauty;
And let us do our daily work,
And think it pleasant duty.
Let's earn our wages as of yore—
The world can never harm us;
Let's love our sweethearts and our wives,
And own that woman charms us.
So shall our actions, like our words,
Be void of affectation.
And spade be spade, and man be man,
Throughout the Yankee nation.

Strive, Wait and Pray.

Strive: yet I do not promise
The prize you dream of to-day,
Will not fade when you think to grasp it,
And melt in your hand away.
But another and better treasure
You would now perchance disdain,
Will come when your toil is over,
And pay you for all your pain.

Wait: yet I do not tell you
The hour you long for now,
Will not come with its radiance vanished,
And a shadow upon its brow.
Yet far through the misty future,
With crown of joy you know not
Is winging her silent flight.

Pray: though the gift you ask for
May never comfort your pleading,
Yet pray, and with hopeful tears;
An answer, not that you long for,
But diviner, will come one day,
Your eyes are too dim to see it,
Yet strive, and wait and pray.

Gentle Humanity.

Shoe the horse and shoe the mare—
Never let the hoof go bare:
Trotting over flinty stones
Wears away the hardest bones.

Life has many a stony street,
Even to the toughest feet;
Men and horses find it so,
Ere through half of life they go.

Streaks of blood are in the way,
Trod by human and beast;
Seen by love's agonized eye,
While the blinded world goes by.

Yea, if all the sighs were caught
Wherever the air is caught;
What a gale would sweep the skies
Laden with man's miseries.

Gently, then, O brother man,
Do the utmost good you can:
God approve of his least Kindly act to man or beast.

Trust.

Ask not summer, though the weakest;
Shrink not from the wintry worst;
Underneath the snows, when bleakest,
All the swelling grain lies warm.

When the heart no sorrow knoweth,
All the grain is garnered dry;
And the stubble only showeth
Where the golden ears have been.

When with sorrow it is broken,
And the Master sows the seed,
Come again the blades, in token
He will give the bread we need.

Buried love and buried treasure
Seek no more with bright dim;
He will give in double measure,
If ye leave them all with him.

Underneath the snows, when bleakest,
All the swelling grain lies warm;
On the barren lies the weakest,
Safely sheltered from the storm.

Anecdotes.

A missionary once rebuked a South Sea Islander for the sin of polygamy. After a week or two the cannibal returned, his face radiant with joy. He all right now; one wife. Me very good Christian.

What did you do with the other? asked the missionary.
Me eat her up.

Are a man and wife both one? asked the wife of a certain gentleman, as she was holding his aching head in her hands.

Yes, I suppose so, was the reply.
Well, then, said she, I came home drunk last night, and I ought to be ashamed of myself.

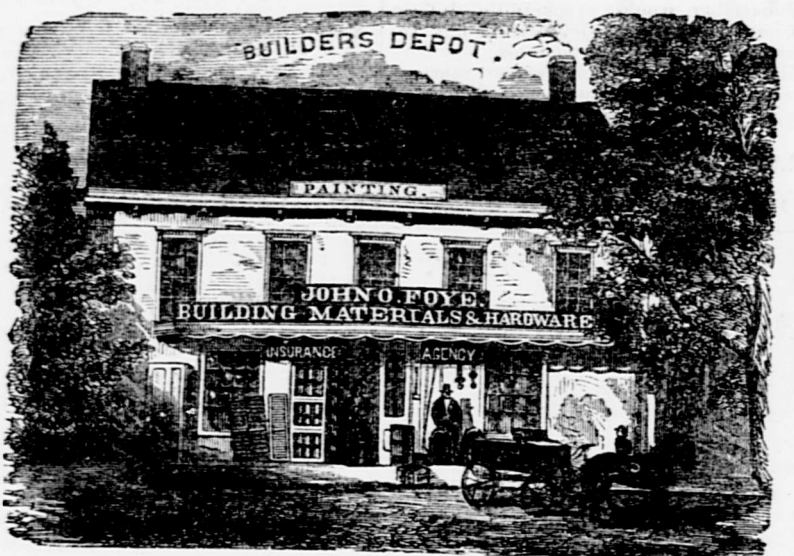

Have you anything else old? said an English lady in Rome to a boy, of whom she had bought some modern antiquities.

Yes, said the urchin, thrusting forward his hat, which had seen some dozen summers, my hat is old. The lady rewarded his wit.

The other day Mrs. Snipkins, being unwell, sent for a medical man, and declared that she was poisoned, and that Mr. Snipkins did it.

I didn't do it, enquired Snipkins. It's all gammon, she isn't poisoned. Prove it, doctor; open her on the spot—I'm willing.

E. T. BABBITT'S BEST SALERATUS.

IS prepared entirely different from other Saleratus. All the deleterious matter extracted in such a manner as to produce Bread, Biscuit, and all kinds of Cake, without containing a particle of saleratus when the bread or cake is baked; thereby producing wholesome results. Every particle of Saleratus is turned to gas and passes through the bread or biscuit while baking, consequently nothing remains but Common Salt, Water and Flour. You will readily perceive by the taste of this Saleratus that it is entirely different from other Saleratus. When you purchase one paper you should take the old paper with you, and the very particular and get the next exactly like the first, (name and picture, twisted Lead-line, with a glass effecting water on the top, or you see in the bill.)

Full directions for making Bread with Sour Milk and Cream Tartar, and all kinds of Pastry, also for making Soda Water; also, directions for making Seidlitz Powders, will accompany each package.

65 and 70 Washington street, N. Y., and 38 India street, Boston.

THE Proprietor of this POTASH has for many years seen the necessity of having some reliable standard for the strength of POTASH. The adulteration has become so general, that it has, notwithstanding its valuable properties, gone nearly out of use. The Proprietor has taken the responsibility of subsidizing his name to every package, and warrants the strength to be uniform, and when used always producing the same results. Potash many times is adulterated with salt, which is destructive in making soap; it makes the Ladies say they did not have good soap out of use, it is so unpleasant to handle, being put in wooden cases, and becoming a liquid in many cases, and very troublesome to the retailers.

Now the Proprietor first obtains pure Potashes, always being the same strength, and producing the same results; and will warrant it in all cases, if the directions are followed, to produce domestic soap in making soaps, and all other purposes for which Potash is used, with full directions for making the best of Soft, Hard, or Family Soaps. It is made with little trouble; the key is all prepared in five or ten minutes.

1 lb. Potash warranted to cut 5 lbs. of grease into good soap.

12 lbs. will make one barrel of beautiful soft soap.

Directions for making soft soap.

Directions for making hard soap.

Directions for Laundry and House.

Directions for cleaning cotton waste that has been used for cleaning machinery of all kinds.

Directions for using this Potash in place of Sal Soda.

Directions for sticking India-rubber soles on Shoes.

All the above directions accompany the can.

COMPLETE Dental Establishment.

DRS. CUMMINGS & FLAGG, SURGEON DENTISTS.

25 Tremont Street, (up stairs), Boston.

DRS. C. & F., having had extensive experience in every branch of practical and scientific Dentistry, and being conversant with the best known methods and latest improvements in the profession, feel qualified to perform all operations in a manner highly satisfactory to patients, and reflecting credit upon themselves.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH. By the improved principle of Atmospheric Pressure, teeth, from one to an entire set, are inserted firmly and beautifully, without the use of springs or clasps. Many beautiful specimens of Plate work on gold, silver and platinum, were on exhibition at our Rooms, which, for taste, style and durability, we believe cannot be surpassed.

EXTRACTING TEETH. In this important and difficult branch of the profession, great care is taken to render the operation the least painful. By the application of a numbing agent to the gum, the operation is performed, with comparatively little pain. This new process of extracting teeth has been in use nearly two years, and we feel confident in recommending it to our patrons and the public, as lessening in a great measure the distress which heretofore existed, and reflecting credit upon themselves.

FILLING TEETH. This is the most difficult operation the dental practitioner is ever called upon to perform. It often-times baffles the skill of operators who have been in practice many years. It is, however, when well performed, the most certain and only remedy that can be applied for the cure of decayed teeth. But, it is effective, it must be executed in the most thorough and perfect manner. The preservation of a tooth, when well filled, and with suitable material, if it be altered, is kept constantly clean, may be regarded as one of the most certain and only remedy that can be applied for the cure of decayed teeth. For the Patriot.

MR. EDITOR: Will you allow me to call the attention of your readers to one of the incidents of the debate on the Auditor's Report, which calls for a passing remark.

It has been a habit of a certain class of small orators of late years, when they want to "point a moral, or adorn a tale," to look out for an Irishman to put into some corner of their argument. In the debate on the Report on Tuesday, one excuse given for the charge of expenditure at the Almshouse, was the expense of transient poor; and the gentleman stated that he had several applications for relief from travelers, and to draw down the house, he inquired if five or six Irishmen were relieved, how long would the house be running up? This was the substance of the remark. Now, Mr. Editor, if so many poor persons have been relieved as to make an important item of expense, why has it not been reported in the account? and if so many poor Irishmen were relieved in town during the past winter as consumed three hundred and fifty dollars worth of meat, is it surprising that we never heard of it, and hospitality so generous ought not to be unknown. It seems too bad that intelligent men should stoop to such paltry means to raise a cheer, or to bolster up a bad cause. Was there to other excuse for the extravagance and jobbing of the last few years, without appealing to the almost worn out, vulgar prejudice, about foreigners. If the gentleman who made the statement, would be so kind as to inform your readers how much expense the "Irish" poor were to the town of Quincy during the past year, and how many pounds of the town's beef they consumed, he would confer a favor on at least one

IRISH CITIZEN.

Miscellaneous.

From Porter's Spirit of the Times.

The Useful Skillet.

The sun had set when Tom J— and myself arrived at Sugar Creek, in the county of P—, Arkansas. We were at the time newly-fledged lawyers, and having stuck out our shingle some time before in one of the eastern counties of the great State of Arkansas, were now sailing forth, conquering to conquer, on our first round of the "circuit."

We had intended, when we started to have fallen in with some of the old lawyers, who would be able to show us the way; but as ill luck would have it, had reached the great ridge road too late—all the lawyers having passed up some half a day before. Consequently, we had to "go it blind," or rather depend on our own abilities in scenting out a road. The sun, as I have said before, was not yet set when we arrived at the Creek, so although two pretty good horses presented their inviting faces near at hand, as if inviting us to stay, we being both of us profoundly ignorant of what lay before us, concluded that, as we had some distance to go before we arrived at Gainsville, we would try to make a mile or two more, before we stopped for the night.

Now, had either of us known what we have since learned, we would have stopped at the Creek, for really there is no good stopping-place for miles afterwards. To be sure we might have asked, but you know "Poor Richard" says,—Experience is a dear school, but fools will learn in no other way.—in regard to this profound saying I have but one remark, which is, that there is a "thundering" lot of fools in the world.

But to continue my story. Tom and I pushed on, and soon began to ascend the ridge, and immediately thereupon the road plunged into one of the most dreary-looking, desolate forests the mind can well imagine. The growth was principally black pine, interspersed with different kinds of oaks, while, as an underbrush, black jack "profusely and extensively" in every direction.

It was not long until the sun went down, and there being but little twilight in such woods it soon became very dark. Now, travelling in the dark is not very pleasant at any time, but more especially when you know from what you have seen, while there was light enough to see, that the road ran along upon the top of a very high ridge, and by the starlight, which occasionally glimmers through the openings of the trees, you can catch occasional glimpses of places where if your horse should make a misstep, you not he would hardly find footing again until you had had a slide of a couple of hundred feet, varied with an occasional butt against a tree.

It is not much wonder, then, that Tom and I felt somewhat relieved when we saw just ahead of us a faint light; and even our horses moved with a freer step, as we rode up to about as unpromising a looking cabin as in all my travels through Uncle Sam's pet State it has ever been my lot to see. It was not long until in answer to our hail, a man presented himself at the opening, which answered for a door; but, alas! it was but to dash cold water upon our newly-formed hopes, by informing us, that his family was sick, and that he could not keep us. He informed us, however, that if we would turn off from the road, and descend the hill, at about half a mile off in the hollow we would find a house where he knew we could stay.—Because, said he, they make it a business to entertain travellers. He informed us, also, that we would lose nothing by going there, as the people there could put us upon a road at least two miles shorter than the one we were then on. Thus encouraged we resolved to make the trial, at any rate; and having received explicit directions as to our road, we started.

When we arrived at the steep declivity, however, our horses snorted, started back, and refused to go down; but by dismounting, leading, and coaxing a little, we managed to get them down; and right glad were we when we found ourselves in the hollow or valley. Here, however, it was pitch dark, and we were forced to remount and trust to our horses, but by their aid we got along thinly.

After riding what, to us seemed three half miles, we arrived in a clearing, and saw the house of our hopes; and a miserable looking object it was too; still it was late, and as we knew of no other place, we put spurs to our horses and rode quickly up to the low fence which surrounded the house—if house it may be called.

Hillo! shouted Tom. Hillo! answered some one in the house; and almost immediately, the quilt which was used for a door was moved aside, and three men—an old one and two younger ones—followed by as many boys, appeared.

Can we find accommodations here for the night? inquired Tom.

Yes! I s'pose so, said the old man. Light, continued he. Take care of the horses, boys! Come this way, men! This last remark was intended for us; so we followed the old man, and pushing aside the quilt, entered the room. A few minutes sufficed to remove our extra wrappings; and then seated on Arkansas stools (blocks sawed off the end of a log,) by the fire, we had time to look around us. The house, which had but one room, was composed of rough logs, the cracks being fastened by some oak "boards" loosely nailed on, which clattered in the wind, producing a not very agreeable music. The floor was made of puncheons which being new, was not yet completely divested of splinters. The whole furniture consisted of some four stools and a kind of a four legged concern, which we supposed was intended for a table; but as all the legs were not of the same length, as it rocked back and forth; required me incessantly of a lame man in both feet. Three rifles with their accoutrements were resting in forked sticks nailed against the wall, and a number of fishing rods were stowed away upon the joints.

But the sight which particularly attracted our attention was the family. First of all were six dogs, which, as they supported the family, were evidently considered worthy of the choice places, and consequently were stretched in every imaginable position around the fire.

Within the room, which might have been fifteen feet square, were the old man, (who had brought us in,) an old woman to match, and two younger ones. After noticing them, Tom and I began to count the children,—one—two—three—four—five—six—seven—eight—nine—ten—eleven! Yes! actually eleven children in the house, which with those that were out, the older members of the family and ourselves, made twenty-two persons and six dogs, who were to inhabit that little space—say two hundred and twenty-five square feet.

How we were ever to lie down, I could not imagine, but as that was their business and not mine, and as I did not care if two-thirds of them lay out-of-doors, so that we were under shelter, I dismissed the subject from my mind, and Tom and I began to watch the movements of the old lady, (the two younger ones were nursing their children.) In vain did the old man endeavor to engage us in conversation, we were too hungry; and the old lady's mode of getting supper was too novel for us to attend to anything else. And this mode I will now try to describe, although you need not be surprised if I make a signal failure, for to this day I can scarcely keep down my risibilities when I think of it.

First, she set a capacious three-legged skillet or spider on the fire to heat while she employed herself in kneading some cornmeal into dough. This accomplished, and the dough formed between her hands into "dodgers," it was soon transferred to the skillet and put on to bake; while she employed herself in cutting some slices of meat off a fat midding.

The bread being baked, it was removed from the skillet, and the meat thrown in, and was soon cracking and hissing over the fire whilst the dogs, aroused by the scent, were licking their lips and snatching their chops in dangerous proximity to the skillet.

But the meat was soon done, and the old lady removed it from the skillet with a one-pronged fork, so as to leave the grease behind; and placing this again on the fire, quickly broke half a dozen eggs into it. The eggs were soon sufficiently fried, and the old lady, having placed them on a tin platter with the meat, and poured the grease over them, she gave the skillet a wipe with a rag, which she took out of the chimney corner, and immediately throwing in a handful of bean (not ground) corn, proceeded to make coffee, in the very same skillet. This, too, was soon accomplished, and lifting the skillet by a rag on to the table, and having made it serve the purpose of an urn by pouring the coffee from it into a couple of tin cups, and placed them without either cream or sugar on our platters, invited us "set up." And we did sit up; and notwithstanding the way in which things were cooked we both made a hearty meal.

While eating, the old lady had again filled the skillet with water, and when we had finished, and had begun a chat with the old gentleman, she set the skillet on the table and washed the dishes in it. She then placed the dishes in the cracks of the house, which very well answered the place of cupboard, dresser, bureau, wardrobe, &c. I now began to hope that the skillet was to have some rest, but alas! for my supper, such was not the case! She again filled it with water, and placed it on the fire, and while I, or, in fact, both of us, wonderingly watched to see what possible use she would put it to now. She, having felt the water to see if it was too warm or not, called up the youngest child in the room, and lifting the skillet from the fire, placed the child's feet in it, and deliberately commenced washing them.

Jerusalem! what stomach could stand it? Mine couldn't; so springing from my seat, and rushing out under the quilt, I ran for it! Before I got twenty yards, however, I began to heave, and my supper want slow coming either. How Tom stood it, how we managed to sleep that night, I know not. I only know that we got up before day next morning, rode twelve miles for our breakfast, and that on the way Tom complained of being hungry, and declared we did not get any supper last night.

Always Finding Fault.

There are certain people who cannot live without finding fault. No matter what subject, or person, comes up in the course of conversation, they start some frivolous objection, or make some censorious remark. Instead of trying to be in charity with their neighbors, they take malicious pleasure in speaking evil about them. They obstinately shut their eyes to good qualities; while they employ microscopes to discover and magnify evil on; and afterwards they torture language to exaggerate what they have seen, so as to depreciate as much as possible.

They do not, however speak out boldly. But they deal in innuendoes, in hints, and in ominous shakes of the head. Instead of frankly assailing in front, they assassinate behind the back. Practically, they persuade others that all men are so evil, that there is not even a chance of reform. Even in acts incontestably good, they pretend to find latent selfishness. They spend their lives in defil-ing human nature, like the foul Yahoos whom the satirist has depicted. To believe them, there are none virtuous but themselves; all the rest of mankind being knaves, brutes or devils.

The proverbial fault finder little thinks that, in censuring so maliciously, and indiscriminately he is only painting his own portrait. It is a secret consciousness of his demerits, a gnawing rage at the superiority of others, which is the real cause of his want of charity, the principal inducement to his abuse. His own heart is the mirror from which he describes mankind. The best men have been those invariably who spoke the most kindly of their race. The great type of all mankind, whose perfect humanity is the admiration even of Pagans and Atheists, ever spoke in benignant terms, having charity even for "publicans and sinners." It is to his precept that we owe the great doctrine of human brotherhood. In the ideal of the fallen Lucifer, we have, on the contrary, the incarnation of malice, hate, slander, ill-will and evil speaking. As the one is said to have come to bring "peace and good-will to men," so the other defiled the fair creation with strife, sowed "war among the hosts of heaven." We never hear a professed fault-finder, but our thoughts recur to his type.—We never listen to the benedictory language of one who is in charity with his race, without feeling that he is advancing more and more to the perfect man."—Philadelphian Ledger.

Knocking Out the Teeth for Beauty.

All the Batoka tribes follow the curious custom of knocking out the upper front teeth at the age of puberty. This is done by both sexes; and though the under teeth, being relieved from the attrition of the upper, grow long and somewhat bent out, and thereby cause the under lip to protrude in a most unsightly way; no young woman thinks herself accomplished until she has got rid of the upper incisors. This custom gives all the Batoka an uncouth, old man-like appearance, even when in the prime of life. They are so attached to it that even Solomon was unable to eradicate the practice. He issued orders that none of the children living under him should be subjected to the custom by their parents, and disobedience to his mandates was usually punished with severity; but, notwithstanding this, the children would appear in the streets without their incisors, and no one would confess to the deed.

When questioned respecting the origin of this practice, the Batoka reply that their object is to be like oxen, and those who retain their teeth they consider to resemble zebras. Whether this is the true reason or not, it is difficult to say; but it is noticeable that the veneration for oxen which prevails in many tribes, should here be associated with hatred to the zebra, as among the Bakwains; that this operation is performed at the same age that circumcision is in other tribes, and that here the ceremony is unknown.

The custom is so universal that a person who has his teeth is considered ugly, and occasionally when the Bakota borrowed my looking-glass, the disparaging remark would be made respecting boys and girls who still retained their teeth, "Look at the great teeth!" Some of the Makololo give a more facetious explanation of the custom: they say that the wife of a chief having in a quarrel bitten her husband's hand, he, in revenge, ordered her front teeth to be knocked out, and all the men in the tribe followed his example; but this does not explain why they afterwards knocked out their own.

The women here are in the habit of piercing the upper lip, and gradually enlarging the orifice until they can insert a shell. The lip then appears drawn out beyond the perpendicular of the nose, and gives them a most anguished aspect. Secwegas says, "These women want to make their mouths like those of ducks;" and, indeed, it does appear as if they had the idea that female beauty of lip had been attained by that operation alone. This custom prevails throughout the country of the Maravi, and no one could see it without confessing that fashion had never led women to a freak more mad.—Livingston's Africa.

Making Ice in the East Indies.

Natural ice is never seen in the warmest part of that country. To procure ice by artificial means, they dig, on a large open plain, not far from Calcutta, three or four pits about thirty feet square, and two feet deep each the bottom of which they cover about eight inches or a foot thick, with sugar cane or the stems of the large Indian corn, dried. On its bed are placed, in rows, a number of small, shallow, unglazed earthen pans, formed of a very porous earth, a quarter of an inch thick, and about an inch and a quarter deep, which, at the dusk of evening, they fill with soft water that has been boiled. In the morning, before sunrise, the ice-makers attend the pits, and collect what is frozen in baskets, which they convey to the place of preservation. This is generally prepared on some high, dry situation by sinking a pit four or five feet deep, lining it first with a coarse kind of blanketing. The ice is deposited in this pit and beat down with rammers till at length its own accumulated cold again freezes it, and forms one solid mass.—The mouth of the pit is well secured from the exterior air with straw and blankets, and a thatched roof is placed over the same. The quantity of ice formed in this method above described, depends on a light atmosphere, and clear, serene weather. Three hundred persons are employed in this operation in one place.

At first sight, this curious process may appear to be an effect of evaporation; but this is not the case; for it is remarkable that it is essential to its success that the straw in which the vessels are placed should be dry, whereas if evaporation were concerned in the congelation, wetting the straw would promote it. When the straw becomes wet by accident it is obliged to be replaced by dry straw.

The earth continually is losing heat by radiation, and it loses most on clear, starlight nights, when there are no clouds to intercept and send back the rays of heat. The straw, like all fermentous substances, is a good radiator of caloric, and it is in consequence of the heat that is thus given out by it into space on clear nights that the ice is formed. When the weather is windy and cloudy, the effect does not take place.—American Druggist's Circular.

How People Lived a Generation Ago.

Hon. S. G. Goodrich, (PETER PARLEY) in his "Recollections of a Lifetime," thus depicts the life of his youth in New England. "Money was scarce, wages about fifty cents a day, though these were generally paid in meat, vegetables, and other articles of use—seldom in money. There was not a factory of any kind in the place. There was a butcher, but he only went from house to house to slaughter the cattle and swine of his neighbors. There was a tanner, but he only dressed other people's skins; there was a clothier, but he generally filled and dressed other people's cloth.

Even dyeing blue a portion of the wool, so as to make linsley-woolsey for short gowns, aprons and mixed blue stockings—vital necessities in those days—was a domestic operation. During the autumn, a dye-ub in the chimney corner, thus placed so as to be cherished by the general heat, was as familiar in all thrifty houses, as the Bible, or the Bible or the back log. It was covered with a board, and a cozy seat in the wide-mouthed fire place, especially of a chilly evening.

Our bread was of rye, tinged with Indian meal. Wheat bread was reserved for the sacrament and company.

All the vegetables came from our garden and farm. The fuel was supplied by our own woods; sweet-scented hickory, snapping chestnut, odoriferous oak and reeking, fizzling ash.

Sugar was partially supplied by our maple trees. They were tapped in March, the sap being collected and boiled in the woods. This was wholly a domestic operation, and one in which all the children rejoiced.

Rum was largely consumed, but our distillers had scarcely begun. A half a pint of it was given, as a matter of course, to every day laborer, more particularly in the summer season. In all families, rich and poor, it was offered to male visitors as an essential point of hospitality, even good manners. Women—I beg pardon—ladies, took their schnapps, then named "Hopkins' Elixir," which was the most delicious and seductive means of getting tipsy that has been invented. Crying babies were silenced with hot toddy, then esteemed an infallible remedy for wind on the stomach. Every man imbibed his morning dram, and this was esteemed temperance. There is a story of a preacher, about those days, who thus lectured his parish: "I say nothing, my beloved brethren, against taking a little bitters before breakfast, and after breakfast, especially if you are used to it. What I contend against is this dramming, dramming, dramming, at all hours of the day."

We raised our own flax, rotted it, hackled it, dressed it, and spun it. The little wheel turned by the foot, had its place, and was as familiar as if it had been one of the family. The wool was also spun in the family, partially by my sisters, and partially by Molly Gregory, daughter of our neighbor, the town carpenter. I remember well as she sang and spun aloft in the attic. In those days, church singing was one of the fine arts; the only one, indeed, except the drum and fife. The choir was divided into four parts, ranged on three sides of the meeting-house gallery.

Twice a year, that is in the Spring and Autumn, the tailor came to the house and fabricated the semi-annual stock of clothes for the male members—this being called whipping the cat. Mantuamakers and milliners came in their turn, to fit out the female members of the family. There was a similar process as to boots and shoes.

At the period of my earliest recollection, men of all classes were all dressed in long broad tailed coats, with huge pockets, long waistcoats and breeches. Hats with low crowns, with broad brim rims—some so wide as to be supported at the sides with cords. The stockings of the parsons, and a few others, were of silk in summer and worsted in winter; those of the people were generally of wool, of blue and grey mixed. Women dressed in wide bonnets—sometimes of straw and sometimes of silk, muslin, gingham, &c.—generally close and short-waisted, the breast and shoulders being covered by the full muslin handkerchief. Girls ornamented themselves with a largely white vandyke.

Tavern haunting especially in winter; when there was little to do; was common, even with respectable farmers. Marriages were celebrated in the evening, at the house of the bride, with a general gathering of the neighborhood, and usually wound off by dancing. Everybody went to public exhibition without invitation. Funerals generally drew large processions, which proceeded to the grave. Here the minister made an address suited to the occasion. If there was anything very remarkable in the history of the deceased, it was turned to religious account in the next Sunday's sermon. Singing meetings, to practice church music, were a great resort for the young in winter.

Bulls at the taverns were frequented by the young; the children of deacons and ministers attended, although the parents did not. The winter brought sleighing and the usual round of in-door sports."

Can I help you?

Can I help you? Just say the word. There speaks the whole-souled whole-hearted man—the man whose very shadow is worth more than the body, soul and estate, personal and spiritual of two-thirds of our human race bearing the name. How he lifts the desponding spirit of his brother in trouble. All day he had met with cold eyes, cold smiles, cold words, cold bows, cold sympathy. Men fly him because they have heard he was unfortunate; and he a villain, a thief, or even a murderer, says the world in action, but don't be unfortunate. I'll lend you ten thousand if you are worth fifty; if you're unfortunate—I'm very poor myself—I would help you—would have done so three days ago, or three hours ago—but positively haven't got three cents, nor shall be in possession of that amount while—while misfortunes lasts. If your old aunt dies, or your old uncle, or in fact anybody who chose to leave you a fortune, why just call on me. I'll manage to have a little change on hand.

But, look! yonder comes a broad shouldered, frank-browed man, who meets his poor brother with a hearty slap on the shoulder, "Can I help you?" just say the word. Don't be afraid now; what's your trouble? Out with it, and if you'd like a little cash just say so. Don't be down-cast; what if you have failed in your expectation once, twice, or three? Haven't some of our most successful merchants done the same thing? made the same mistakes? And where would they have been had they not found friends? Come, what do you want—how much? He don't clap his hands in his pockets with a styx like frown that says as plainly as if he had brawled it out in your ear, no entrance here. He is not one of those dyspeptic, cross-grained, surly, moaned-machines that squeezes a sixpence till it squeals, and reads a newspaper with a greedy, voracious eagerness, for fear he shall not get his two cents worth. He lives for something else, that man, than gain. His passport to Heaven is written on his face, his religion on the heart and downcast and sorrowing; in the homes he help him happy by his benevolence.

"Can I help you?" Write the words in golden letters for they are only heard on rare occasions. The sneer, the scorn, the doubt, the refusal—they come with every nightfall and sun-rising. Niggards grow like mushrooms, but angels are scarce. Niggards can never look beyond themselves, their own comfort—their own convenience; no matter who starves next door, they scatter curses in discouragement and blight, over God only knows, how many gentle hearts. They never say, "Can I help him?" but he's down, let's kick him. But the angelic ministry of those helpers to humanity, men who believe they were entrusted with powers the gods might envy, that they might be used to some good purpose; what shall we say to them? Good, whole-souled, generous man, the angels and God himself smiles approval, when with beaming eyes, and hopeful words, you said to the dispirited brother, "Can I help you?"

Our worthy Town Clerk, owing to matrimonial duties, has neglected to furnish us, as promised, with further proceedings. The remainder we are in hopes to give next week.

FIREMAN'S AID, No. 1. This excellent Hook and Ladder Company, composed of many of our valued to women, at their regular monthly meeting last Monday evening, gave an entertainment. The evening passed pleasantly—the Chowder of different kinds most excellent, and the closing festivities of an agreeable nature. Their generous Foreman, Richard Newcomb, added liberally to enhance the enjoyments of the evening, and with the acceptable music furnished by the Quincy Band rendered this monthly gathering one of great pleasure and rational enjoyment.

THE CONCERT at the Town Hall on Wednesday evening was another achievement of that unrivaled vocalist, Miss Chapman. Her Concert was eminently successful. Although the audience was not large, it was composed of those who could do honor to her varied accomplishments.

Presentation of a Sword.

A part of the ceremonies of the Hancock Light Guards at their late Levee, was the presenting of an elegant sword to their respected Commander, Captain Newcomb. It was a testimonial of esteem, by his associates in arms, of his worth as a citizen and soldier, highly complimentary to that gentleman. The accompanying speech of Mr. White on the occasion, and the response by the Captain may be found below:

CAPTAIN NEWCOMB. I have been deputed by the officers and Members of the Hancock Light Guards, in token of their esteem for your affable demeanor, — the satisfaction your conduct as Commander has given, and the high opinion entertained by them for your military talents, to present you with this sword. Receive it as a humble testimonial of our kind regards for the lively interest and laudable pride you have ever manifested in our welfare, to appear and do well. We feel that we are awarding it to one who can appreciate its value as a soldier, and will be ever ready with a willing heart and hand to draw it, when duty calls, in defence of liberty and justice. Take it, Sir, and may it serve as a memento to remind you of our esteem and respect for the valuable services of a patriotic citizen soldier.

LIEUTENANT WHITE: It affords me much pleasure and gratification to receive from your hands this valuable token of approval of my command; Let me assure the Company, through you, Sir, that this is an unlooked for, unexpected gift; and in accepting it, allow me to tender you, and those in whose behalf you have spoken, my heartfelt thanks. I have aimed to do my duty, and if my humble services, have met your approval, it is a cause for rejoicing—I am happy to know it. Again, then, I tender my sincere thanks, and assure you that I shall ever cherish this testimonial of your esteem and approval with the kindest regards for your welfare and happiness, as citizens, and as citizen soldiers.

ACCIDENT. Mr. Preston P. Kurlidge had his left hand badly lacerated while cutting hay, yesterday. Dr. Saville removed one of his fingers and dressed his other injuries.

Deaths.
In this town, on the 12th ult., Aelnde M., daughter of Mr. John M. and Mrs. Piscilla R. Wheeler, aged 1 year 11 months.

On the 28th ult., Harriet F., infant daughter of Mr. John and Mrs. Harriet F. Wildman.

On the 31st inst., Dr. Jonathan Marden, aged 54 years.

The deceased was a native of Chichester, New Hampshire, and has been a resident of this town for the last four or five years. He was a successful medical practitioner of the botanic school, enjoying the reputation of a skillful and experienced physician which secured him a wide field of usefulness. He was universally esteemed, and his death universally regretted. His disease, at first a slow fever, it was thought would readily yield to mild restoratives—but on Sunday last, it took an unfavorable turn, under which, he rapidly declined, until Tuesday morning, when death closed the scene. His death, he rapidly declined, until Tuesday morning, when death closed the scene. His death, he rapidly declined, until Tuesday morning, when death closed the scene.

The last solemn rites to the remains were performed yesterday, at his late residence, where the Rev. Mr. Clark officiated in a most impressive manner; they were then conveyed, followed by a large concourse of sympathizing friends, to the receiving tomb, to be removed to his native village, as their final resting place.

Rev. Nelson Clark will preach a funeral discourse on the occasion, in the Town Hall to-morrow, (Sunday,) afternoon.

MR. EDITOR:—Having heard the remarks of a would-be orator, at the adjourned town meeting on Tuesday last week, in regard to the expenditure of money, for the support of paupers in the Almshouse for the past year, in which he stated that he knew of six

Irishmen having applied in one day, for food and lodging at that institution; and, that it was owing to relief given to persons of foreign birth, that caused the expenses of the Almshouse to be so much as they were shown to be. Now for the information of the taxpayers of Quincy, I would ask this modern orator to show, either by names or items produced by the Superintendent of the Almshouse, how much money has been expended by that institution on Irishmen or their families for the past year.

I believe that of the twelve inmates, who are supported there, none of them are Irish.

And on looking over the names of persons set forth in the Report for the past year, as having received out door relief from the Town, I find the name of only one Irishman.

In the person of H. Roardon. It appears he has cost the Town the sum of eleven dollars, which appears but a very small sum, when 231808 has been expended for support of the Almshouse.

These outpourings of vile vituperations—

too often spouted for a given purpose at town meetings, in regard to Irish and Irish-

ism—is becoming rather a stale farce in these enlightened days, when Irishmen are beginning to understand their position as citizens of their adopted country.

Even in despite of the proscriptive ordeal,

through which they have passed within the past four or five years, but as the old adage says—Out of evil springs good; it was perhaps, owing to the hatred and animosity that has been exhibited towards foreigners for the past few years that has made so many of that class to be enabled to cast their vote at the ballot box, with as much privilege as those who claim the descendancy of the Pilgrim Fathers: and every year for the next ten years, will add a large number of voters to the list in the town of Quincy, from the ranks of those now styled "Beef-eaters."

It's true they are beef consumers, but if they are, they work hard to earn the means to purchase that desideratum.

Finding a Criminal.

I was aroused one morning from a sound sleep by a quick, loud rap upon my door. I had been on duty late into the morning, and hence kept my bed longer than usual. By the time my wife had reached my room. I was up and half dressed. She told me that

Inspector Starling, one of my brother detectives, wished to see me. I hurried down, and found him pacing to and fro across the room in a state of considerable excitement.

Ah, Goff, we've got some work in our hands, he cried the moment he saw me.—

There's been a murder—a strange one—by

Newgate Market. But come along, and I'll tell you as I go.

As soon as we gained the street, Starling resumed—

Last evening one of the butchers packed

a box of meat to go off to-day, but this morning he changed his mind, and concluded to unpack it, as there was some doubt the stuff keeping. When he removed the cover, he found the body of a man cut up, and stowed

snuggly away in place of his meat, and this latter article was afterwards found in a neighboring cellar.

I asked if the butcher was not suspected.

No, replied my companion. We know it could not have been he, for his time is all accounted for. No! some one who knew that the box was packed to go off this morning, must have taken advantage of the circumstance, and thus hoped to gain time for escape, or perhaps, to have thrown the blame upon another. It was an old man who was murdered; and it was evidently done for revenge.

Why do you think so? I asked.

Because fragments of clothing were found in the pockets. Strange, isn't it?

I acknowledged that it was.

We overtook a party of men at this juncture, and ere we had opportunity to converse much more we had reached Newgate. The box was in a small office, and a commissioner had arrived. The parts of the body had been taken out and placed together, thus forming a whole frame with the exception of the head, this latter part being absent. The victim had been not far from three-score; a tall, well-formed man, and as far as we could judge from the fragments of clothing and the appearance of the hands, a member of the richer class of society.

Our first object was to find if the remains

could be identified, but in this we failed entirely. Two days passed without the least

new light upon the subject, but on the evening of the second day, we received notice that a human head had been found in a small pond, or pool, in Epping, and was in the possession of the officers of that place.

Here might be a clue, and I was finally set upon the track. I chose to go alone, for on such an errand too many cooks most emphatically spoil the broth. I felt sure that if I could once get my eye upon the murderer,

I should know him. There is something in the very look and bearing of a man who has committed a murder, as palpable to me as the color of the Ethiop. I can see it written on his face, though how I cannot tell. It may be an intuitive perception, or it may be from long habit in hunting rogues.

It was thus in the morning, I was taking the saddle for my seat, and reaching

Epping at midnight. I found the coroner, and he showed me the human head. It was the very one, I knew it by the grey hair,

and by the manner in which it had been cut off, neck having been divided close by the shoulders. I requested my host to keep my visit a secret, as it might be necessary that my coming should not be known. He assured me that no one save himself and messenger knew that word had been sent to London of the finding of the head.

In the morning we went to the place where the terrible proof of crime had been found,

and I examined the sandy shore of the pond thoroughly. There were too many tracks,

however, for me to make anything of them.

Of one thing I was sure: that the head had been thrown in at night, for it had rested in shallow water, with two bricks tied to it,

whereas had it been thrown in by daylight,

the villain would have selected a deeper spot.

The coroner suggested that the murderer

had kept on by the great stage road through

Essex, but I felt differently. I believed he had struck across towards Waltham Abbey, and upon this supposition I determined to act.

My first movement after this was to obtain a suit of laboring-men's clothes, which my host procured of a fellow who was at work in a drain in his garden. They were well worn, and when I got them on I looked as rough as I could wish. I then made a snug bundle of my own garments, which I tied up

MISCELLANEOUS.

A Night in a Railway Station.

Who does not remember the night of — January, 1856, after a cold day with deep snow on the ground, there came up that furious, bitter wind which piled drifts along our streets, filled up our railroads, and buried for the rest of the winter many a little country lane? I do, for one, and will tell you why.

A dear friend of mine, who lives at —, on the Delaware, about ten miles from the city, was very ill, and twice a week during the winter, I went to see her, going out by the New York railroad, which passes close by her residence.

On that Tuesday, I went out in the morning, as usual, and when it was time for me to return to the city, my friends sent me to the station about seven o'clock in the evening, momentarily expecting the cars.

Another sleigh drove up, and a young lady was lifted out by an elderly gentleman whom she called—Uncle.

I don't like to leave you here, Nell, said he.

Why, dear Uncle, has not father done it every week this winter? The conductor knows us, and brother Will always meets me at the depot. I wouldn't miss going to-night for anything. I am to sing Casta Diva, you know, and I have been practising it these six months, for one of those musical evenings. Why, I must go. Don't you see it is imperative? Father trusts me alone. He will be alarmed if I do not return to-night.

Well, well. But it is so bitter cold, and blowing so, he added, doubtfully.

Never mind. In five minutes at farthest I shall be in good warm cars. In another half hour with Will in our carriage, and soon after that snug at home. So don't worry about me, and don't wait, Uncle. You know you promised Aunt that you would not wait.—She said it was madness to go out at all with your sore throat. I have come so often alone, why need you fear now?

Well, are you warm? This wind goes to one's bones!
Do look at my furs! Lined cloak, muff, shoes, and all.

Well, I shall leave John here with you.—Good night, dear.

Good night, Uncle.
Hardly was her Uncle out of sight when she turned to John, the coachman, who was stamping his feet upon the platform.

Are you very cold, John? she asked.
Yess, miss. I got chilled getting up, and I'm a little forgetful my top.

Another sleigh jingled up. Out of it sprang a tall young gentleman, muffled in a thick shawl. The driver had a lantern, and taking it from him, the gentleman held it aloft and surveyed those who were his fellow-passengers.

Ah, Miss Clare, how do you do? he exclaimed, gladly. And Miss Clare answered his greeting, calling him Mr. Woodworth.—He went on to say how surprised he was that he was in time for the cars, for the snow had been so drifted that he had been more than an hour in reaching the station. He had only come on because he thought the cars might be behind time on account of the snow.

Miss Clare, too, had thought she should never arrive; and she so sorry for poor John, whom her uncle had left to take care of her, and who would be almost frozen in waiting and walking home.

Let him go in the sleigh with my man; he passes your uncle's house, said the gentleman. I shall be most happy to take care of you. It's a bad night for walking—the wind is driving, and the snow so drifted.

Miss Clare gladly assented, and I was heartily pleased to see the poor chilled fellow wrapped in a robe, driving off in comfort.—We heard afterwards that on arriving at her uncle's he reported that as the cars were just coming, he thought he might leave Miss Elton in Mr. Woodworth's care. So her relatives passed the night in comfort of mind and body.

The station house was a little frame building, consisting of only one room, with no fire in it. It sheltered us from the wind, but nevertheless, I began to get bitter cold, and I listened eagerly for the cars. A half hour passed, and they had not come. My two companions in misfortune still talked merrily, with an occasional wonder at the delay, and speculation on its cause. Mr. Woodworth had hung the lantern upon a high nail, and I could often see their faces. That of Miss Clare was pretty and delicate. Just now, it was all smiles and rosiest. Mr. Woodworth's was dark, mustached, and handsome. I was much interested in the pair, but my interest met with no return, for neither of them noticed me any more than if I were invisible.

I new by their conversation that they were not mere acquaintances. There was a subdued, half-expressed tone; sometimes a warmth and sometimes a hesitation, which seemed significant to me. I imagine that the circumstance of their being so alone here made them more reserved, imposing a sweet restraint, which secretly whispered how near they were to each other.

Another hour passed. Even the lovers were cold now. The cutting wind stole in at innumerable cracks, piled heaps of snow here and there on the floor, and swept across the railroad as if it would carry our little tenement with it. The telegraph lines sounded out long wild notes, the Storm King's own Æolian harp, making fearful music for his majesty. The fine, hard snow, driven against the thin walls, seemed like a battery of needles.

The snow must have drifted very much to detain the train so long; perhaps we had better return, said Mr. Woodworth.

That would be impossible. I could not walk so far in this wind, even if there were no snowdrifts, the lady answered.

But I would call at your uncle's and send the sleigh for you.

She cast an uneasy, fearful look around, and then an appealing one at him.

You are afraid to be left alone? Then I certainly shall not leave you.

I observed the fondness of tone was balanced by a studious ceremony of look and manner.

The cars will surely be here in a minute or two now, she answered, hopefully, and if they should come while you are gone? I feel afraid to night.

I knew it was vain for me to attempt to reach my friend's residence, but I felt that I must stand still or sit still no longer. I must walk about briskly, or I should fall asleep.

I commenced the agonizing promenade which did not cease until hour after hour had passed by, for I did not dare to stop.

At first I was in such pain with my hands and feet that I was quite heedless of my companions, and my attention was not arrested until I heard low murmured words of comfort.

I looked at Miss Clare. Tears forced by pain were rolling down her cheeks, and Mr. Woodworth was pitying her. He begged her to take his shawl, but she positively refused.

No, no, she kept on replying, I don't want it, indeed! Do, pray, keep it on—you will freeze without it. I can't bear to see you take it off.

Concern for him was in her tone.

Then allow me, he said, with a gentle, apologetic glance, and drew her within it—close to him—into the warm shelter of his arms.

The necessity excused it. She felt that it did, and she did not refuse to let him hold her hands in his.

Thus for one of us, at least, was happiness wrung from that bitter night.

I continued my painful walk: I threw my arms about like a coachman: I rubbed my hands and stamped my feet: I ran and jumped. I would not let the death sleep creep over me. My frantic walk was always past the window, and I stopped each time to look for the glowing red eye of the locomotive—how many thousand times to turn away in disappointment!

The lovers stood in silence. At last I saw that her head rested upon his shoulder, her whole weight leaning upon his arm. She was almost asleep, while he only thought of the delight of such a burden.

Sir, I ventured to say to him, your charge is in a critical state.

Be so kind as to let her alone, sir, said he, angrily. She is losing the sense of pain. She'll sleep away her life, sir, I answered you had better let her suffer—shake her roughly—you had better rouse her even by sharp pain than let her die!

My love! he cried, starting affrighted, and holding her from him; my darling, my very life! wake up!

She opened her eyes languidly, smiled, leaned upon his shoulder, and fell asleep.

With one arm around her waist, and the other firmly grasping her hand, he tried to make her walk. Her feet refused to move; he was only dragging her along.

You must rouse her sharply, said I.

What can I do?

Pinch her, or shake her.

He threw an indignant glance at me.

You are answerable for her life, I said warningly.

He hesitated; but did not resort to my measures. He stooped over her, and gently kissed her cheek. It was enough. Her bewildered eyes sought his face. Was it to make the cure complete, or was it only an affectionate impulse, that he more warmly and hastily repeated the remedy? She drew back, and the warm blood mounted through her pale cheeks to her very brow. He explained in deep, earnest tones. She was aroused, and walked as quickly as she could to and fro, rather seemingly avoid leaning on his arm. Yet she was not angry.

When she became fully able to stand alone, he asked me to walk with her, and then, once more seeing that the shawl was wrapped around her, for she had it all now, he went to the door.

Miss Clare sprang towards him.

You will not go out to perish in the snowdrifts! You will not leave us alone! O, Mr. Woodworth, the cars will be here in a minute, perhaps. Oh, stay with me!

I must make the attempt to reach some house. I should not have forgotten everything in my own happiness as I've so culpably done. You must have warmth and care, or else, poor, beautiful darling, you may die!

If you leave me I shall die! she cried. If I knew you were struggling in a snow-drift alone, it would kill me! You must not go!

She clung to his hand. I will walk all night, or until the cars come: they must come soon, now. O, do not leave me, or I shall die of fear. Or if you will go, I will go, too.

He was moved from his purpose, and another hour was spent in walking with the weeping but contented girl.

The lantern began to give tokens of going out, but I could see that Miss Clare's steps began to be uncertain. Allowing her to rest a moment, and sink into a partial state of insensibility, he gave her to me, silently, and set out for succor. It was now near morning. I shook the lady well, and used every means to keep her in motion. It was good exercise for me, and we thus kept each other awake.

At last we were left in utter darkness. It turns me sick to think of the bitter agony of the next hour; but when the dawn began to appear we heard voices. Aid had arrived. We were carried to a tavern about half a mile distant, and cautiously warmed into life again.

Poor Mr. Woodworth had reached the house in so exhausted a state, and was so chilled, that they refused to allow him to come back for us. He was ready, however, to receive Miss Clare when we arrived, but she was too stupified to recognize him.

When the second train from New York passed, we were sufficiently recruited to go to the city, and by that time Miss Clare and I were good friends. She was so shy of her anxious, attentive lover, that I was inclined to call her prudish; but it was the memory of the scenes in the station-house which embarrassed her. For my part, the physical anguish I had endured was uppermost in my mind, and remains so, but the episode of the lovers is a mitigation of the remembrances of that horrible night.

They are married now, and happy, in Europe. Our sympathy in suffering has made us friends for life.

The Follies that Divide Us.

When I recall the stories of my friends, I could tell you volumes of tragedies. One loved a maiden, and was loved in return; but he was poor—she was rich. Parents and relations despised him, and two hearts were broken. Why? Because it is thought a misfortune that a lady's dress should be made from the wool of a plant in America rather than from the fibres of a worm in China.

Another loved a maiden, and was loved in return; but he was a Protestant—she was a Catholic. Mothers and Priests disagreed, and two hearts were broken. Why? Because, three centuries before, Charles the Fifth, Francis the First, and Henry the Eighth, played a political game at chess.

A third loved a maiden, and was loved in return; but he was noble—she was a plebeian. The sisters were jealous, and two hearts were broken. Why? Because, a hundred years ago, a soldier slew another who was threatening a King's life in battle.

He was rewarded with titles and honor, and his great grandson atones, with a blighted life, for the blood which was then shed by him.

Each hour, says the collector of statistics, some heart is broken—and I believe it.—Fraser's Magazine.

The Winter of the Heart.

Let it never come upon you. Live so that good angels may protect you from this terrible evil—the winter of the heart.

Let no chilling influence freeze up the fountain of sympathy and happiness from its depths; no cold barren settle over its withered hopes, like snow on the faded flowers; no rude blasts of discontent moan and shriek through its desolate chambers.

Your life path may lead you amid trials, which for a time seem entirely to impede your progress, and shut out the very light of heaven from your anxious gaze.

Penury may take the place of ease and plenty; your luxurious home may be exchanged for a single, lowly room—the soft couch for the straw pallet—the rich viands for the coarse food of the poor. Summer friends may forsake you, and the unquitting world pass you with scarcely a word of compassion.

You may be forced to toil wearily, steadily, on, to earn a livelihood; you may encounter fraud and base avarice, which would exhort the last farthing, till you will neigh turn in disgust from your fellow beings.

Death may sever the dear ties that bind you to earth, and leave you in fearful darkness.

The nobly, manly boy, the sole hope of your declining years, may be taken from you, while your spirit clings to him with a wild tenacity, which even the shadow of the tomb cannot wholly subdue. But amid all these sorrows, do not come to the conclusion that nobody was ever so deeply afflicted as you are, and abandon every sweet anticipation of "better days" in the unknown future.

Chastity

Young kissed the young rose, and it bent softly to sleep. Stars shone, and pure dew drops hung upon its bosom, and watched its sweet slumbers. Morning came with dancing breezes, and they whispered to the young rose, and it swung joyous and smiling.—Lightly it swung to and fro in all the loveliness of health and youthful innocence.—Then came the ardent sun-god, sweeping from the east, and smote the young rose with its scorching rays, and it fainted. Deserted and almost heart-broken, it drooped to the dust in its loveliness and despair. Now the gentle sea, pushing on the home-bound bark, sweeping over hill and dale, by the neat cottage and still brook, turning the old mill, fanning the brow of disease, and frisking the curls of innocent childhood,—came tripping along on her errand of mercy and love; and when she saw the young rose, she hastened to kiss it, and fondly bathed its head in cool, refreshing showers, and the young rose revived, and looked and smiled in gratitude to the kind breeze; but she hurried away, for she soon perceived that a delicious fragrance had been poured upon her wings by the grateful rose; and the kind breeze was glad in heart, and went away singing through the trees. Thus chastity, like the breeze, gathers fragrance from the drooping flowers it refreshes, and unconsciously reaps a reward in the performance of its office of kindness, which steals on the heart like rich perfume, to bless and to cheer.

Rapidity of Thought in Dreaming.

A very remarkable circumstance, and an important point of analogy, is to be found in the extreme rapidity with which the mental operations are performed, or rather with which the material changes on which the ideas depend are excited in hemispherical ganglia. It would appear as if a long lapse of time, pass ideally through the mind in one instant. We have in dreams no true perception of the lapse of time—a strange property of mind! for if such be also its property when entered into the eternity. The relations of space, as well as time, are also annihilated, so that almost while an eternity is compressed into a moment, infinite space is traversed more swiftly than by real thought. There are numerous illustrations of this on record. A gentleman dreamt that he had enlisted as a common soldier, joined his regiment, deserted, was apprehended, carried back, tried, condemned to be shot, and at last led out for execution. After the usual preparations a gun was fired; he awoke with the report, and found that a noise in the adjoining room had at the same moment produced the dream and awakened him. A friend of Dr. Abercrombie dreamt that he had crossed the Atlantic and spent a fortnight in America. In embarking, on his return, he fell into the sea, and awakening in the fright, found that he had not been in bed ten minutes.

Going Home.

Well, boys, give me your hands, I am going home.

We grasped his hand and mechanically stammered a good-bye a safe return—a happy meeting—or something of similar signification. I hardly know what now; for although one we are about to lose has been a kind and genial companion, and an honest friend; still the word, going home, was echoing in my ear and filling my mind with other thoughts than those of the loss I was sustaining. The eye soon lost reflection of his form, but, going home, was busily at work upon my brain, with the delicate pencil of thought tracing pictures both real and imaginary. Yes, he was going home! The toil, fatigue and privation of lung and weary years, were now over, and were gradually vanishing from his mind like the spent clouds of a summer shower, leaving a bright sky above his head, and a fragrant, dewy freshness around his path.

Going home! Home—the roof that shelters childhood and youth. Home—the well at the door, where so often he has cooled his lips and quenched his thirst, and the shady old elm beside it, whose leaves and branches have echoed his bursts of joy and merriment. Home.

"The Orchard, the meadow, the deep-tangled wilderness, And all the loved scenes which my infancy knew."

Home—the glad welcome of father and mother, glad even to tearfulness. Home—the fond greeting of brother and sister; a wife's arms around his neck, and eyes gazing up into his own in which he reads welcome, love and tenderness, that finds no utterance in words; the welcome of friends that have trusted him in other days. Home—few words,

—Where affection calls, And the shires the heart has builded."

They were all pleasant fancies to me, and would soon be to him blissful realities. But alas! for this, our adopted and hitherto almost homeless land, "going home," has a dirge-like sound, that falls upon our ear like the farewell of a beloved one upon the remaining household. Alas! that amid all thy wealth, grandeur, beauty, luxury and health, the knell-like sound of "going home," should so often be heard upon the shores. In thy Home rests thy hope, prosperity and safety, and it is gladdening to know that thou art fast redeeming thyself from the blighting curse of a "homeless land." Exchange.

First Lessons of Cheating.

Does it ever strike the minds of our merchants, bank directors, and other men of business, that the forgeries, false entries, and the whole variety of deceptions which mark the history of our day, are the natural offspring of the training of many respectable mercantile establishments? It is notorious that in not a few stores which have a good standing in public estimation, the apprentices and clerks are instructed to make the whole system of selling a deceit. Secret marks are used to guide the salesman in the scale by which he may graduate the price to suit the sagacity or ignorance of the customer. Counterfeit labels are attached to merchandise, so as to make American manufactures pass for foreign; or the fabrics of an unknown house for the standard one whose name is falsely pasted upon it. Old goods are subjected to a mechanical process, tied up and labelled as new, and passed for fresh importations. An imitative article is mixed up in a package, with the genuine so placed outside, as to give the impression that the inside is of the same description. Stamps, boxes, wrappers, are closely imitated, to make the inferior and the cheaper bring the price of the best. False names, false descriptions of the quality and material, are given by the title of goods. Secrecy is enjoined on the subordinates as to all these matters, and many collateral devices belong to the system, so that there is a mercantile craft and free masonry.

We do not allege that this system is pursued to the full extent of a deliberate scheme in every establishment; but if such things are done in many large and reputable houses, where, in the aggregate, hundreds and thousands are trained for business, I ask, whether those who permit or require the proficiency of their pupils, when their clerks practise these arts upon their own signatures and account books? In every other particular connected with apprenticeship, young men go upon the principal that they are preparing for business on a larger scale and for their own interests; why should it be thought a strange thing by employers, that having conducted their proceedings through years of deceit in the petty details of the counter, they should find them branching out in the larger villany of false entries, and abstracted funds, and breach of trust? It is the habit of little frauds, daily pursued, that blunts the moral sense, and prepares it to submit to higher temptations. It is the constant allowance of plausible excuses one to increase the scale of his falsehoods. I knew a manufacturer of hats to justify his putting Paris and London marks on the work of his own establishment, because some were weak enough to think that an American hat is not good enough for their heads, while he was sure they could not tell the difference, and only judged by the stamp on the lining. This may be perfectly true; the American hat may be the best and handsomest, but the lie is not the less heinous.—The Presbyterian.

Calculating Machines

Babbage's celebrated calculating machine has long been known and used in England, but has never been brought into use in this country. It is said to be almost an impossibility to make a series of pages of figures absolutely correct and free from errors, except at a great expense for proof reading. A single reader becomes confused and mystified by dwelling upon figures only, and is as likely to make errors as to correct them. As he cannot remain long at reading without becoming confused, his place must be supplied by others, who become confused in turn, to be then succeeded by fresh readers. The English sailing tables, by which all British ships were navigated, were said to be caused to be always wrong in some figure, and ships were being wrecked continually in consequence of their errors. They were made absolutely correct by Babbage's machine, which was the wonder of the time at which it was produced. But as a great discovery always leads to imitations, just as the best songs have been the most frequently parodied, so Babbage was not only imitated, but even surpassed. A French savant had completed an arithmometer of surpassing accuracy. He has worked patiently at this machine for thirty years. His name is Thomas, and his machine adds up, subtracts, multiplies, and divides, to an astonishing extent, and with perfect accuracy. It will multiply eight figures by eight others in eighteen seconds, divide any sixteen figures by eight others in twenty-four seconds, and in a minute and a quarter will extract the square root of sixteen figures, and give the proof. This machine relieves the human mind, instead of taxing it. It works out the most difficult and complex operations with a rapidity and accuracy that defy competition, and adapts itself to any sort of combination. Its mechanism is extremely simple, while it is compact, light and portable. It is now used in various financial concerns in Paris, and will yet find its way into every great national observatory. To astronomers, it will be found of unspeakable value. Pascal and Leibnitz spent years in attempting to produce such a machine, but they were a century too soon.

Astonishing Case of Spiritual Cure.

Mr. Rufus Elmer, of Springfield, well known in this community, and unquestionable authority in matters of fact, gives the following remarkable statement in the Republican, of that place.

"A case has just come to my knowledge of the son of a wealthy farmer in Ellington, Ct., who for some two years and a half has been afflicted with a strange disease, manifesting it in numerous fits. The best physicians in the neighborhood have all failed to relieve the patient, and have all frankly acknowledged that they did not know the cause of his sufferings. The parents, who were not Spiritualists, ventured to consult a man in Hartford by the name of Reed, who professed that his hand was moved by some power other than his own to describe diseases by writing. The intelligence—whatever it was—asserted that among other difficulties, which I omit for the sake of brevity, his stomach contained a black live lizard five inches long, with light spots on its back, which could be removed if the patient would take the following prescription, viz: A table spoonful of spirits of turpentine, a half-pint of strong tea made of black cherries, a certain spider's web and injections of strong tobacco juice! Strange to say, the prescription was taken which resulted in dislodging the horrid reptile, which was exactly as had been described. I have the facts from the mother of the young man, who gave the prescription, and from the patient himself, both of whom declare the circumstances were such as not to admit of any possible deception. I have just seen them both, and also the reptile, which lived five minutes after it was dragged from its coil."

fortable quarters. I make no comments other than to ask, if the intelligence which wrought the above wonder was not what it claimed to be, what was it? Echo answers what?"

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

SCHOOL EXHIBITION. A friend who was present at the exhibition of the Adams Grammar School, on Wednesday evening last, Stephen Morse, Jr., Teacher, informs us that the exercises were of the highest order, consisting of declamation, singing, etc., and certainly evinced a thorough training of the pupils, under Mr. Morse's charge, which could not have been brought about otherwise than by the indefatigable exertions and patience of the Teacher. The declamation exercises would have done credit to much older persons,—which were listened to with marked attention. We can only mention a few, although all were deserving of great praise. Foster, C. H. Curtis, C. B. Curtis, Reed and Dinegan, all went through with their parts in a highly creditable manner; Bigelow in his "Plea" and "Gridiron," was excellent; Shaw in "Fuss and Frets," done himself credit. Of the young ladies we cannot speak in too high praise; Miss Hayden in the "Gambler's Wife" was beautiful. The Misses Hardwick and Miss Churchill, Miss Willet and Miss Spear, Miss Glover, Miss Clapp and Williams, and in fact all exceeded expectation and were highly creditable to the School, the Teacher and the District. Such exhibitions as these, must, without doubt, exert a salutary influence upon our schools—create an interest in the parents, which cannot otherwise be done. We were much pleased to see so many parents present, who listened with intense interest to the end. The order was almost perfect. We would suggest to the Teacher, the propriety at the next exhibition, to take the Town Hall; the room in this instance, was too much crowded for pleasure or even comfort.

THE SEVENTEENTH—THE ANNIVERSARY of St. Patrick, was duly honored by our Irish citizens with a ball at the Town House, on Wednesday evening last. The day and its associations, brought out a large assemblage, over one hundred couple being present. We noticed among the number, many of our most valuable citizens. The arrangements were carried out in an admirable style, reflecting great credit upon the liberal and courteous managers. The supper was furnished by Loring French, of the Washington street Saloon who, on this occasion, as well as all others, was successful in his endeavors to please. The music was good, and the prompter perfect and in time. The entertainments of the evening were opened by some of our most fashionable waiters and quadrilles, in which many a fair dancer, took part, with a bewitching grace and dignity. Later in the evening, a number of Irish jigs and hornpipes were introduced, admirably adapted to the mercurial temperament of the Irish character, which requires both body and soul to be thrown into the dance, for its faithful execution, and to receive marked emphasis at certain points. The festivities were kept up until early dawn, when the happy party separated, with renewed feelings of veneration for the memory of Ireland's patriot saint, and with fervent aspirations for heaven's choicest blessings on their adopted and native land. For good order, harmony, and a pleasant past-time, it will compare favorably with any similar exhibition of the season.

THE BOSTON LEDGER is one of the most spirited and racy little sheets within the circuit of New England. It is always welcome. There is not one among our exchanges that we should miss more. As a newspaper for the general reader, it has but few equals. It is well posted up in the news of the day, with other choice reading matter, and is fast gaining the character as one of the best journals for family use. It has another feature, which must not be overlooked. Its strong Democratic affinities recommend it strongly to a particular portion of the community. In the late Presidential campaign it entered early into the field, and done noble service for that party. It is a bold and fearless advocate of Democratic principles. Is largely national in its views. Sustains the President in the course which he has taken in regard to Kansas. Goes in for an immediate settlement of that vexed question. And sums up its reasons, by saying, that the labor, industry, and the best interests of the country demand it. That the people demand it. That even the citizens of that Territory, are looking to the General Government as their best friend, and are urgent in their request to have their troubles speedily brought to a close. In fact, that all interests, and all classes demand it, except a few desperate political gamblers, whose only desire is, that it should be kept open for future use, to build up a new party. We wish Mr. Barnard, the proprietor, every success in his undertaking.

THE ADDRESS FOR THE REMOVAL of JUDGE LORING from the office of Probate Judge, which passed both branches of the Legislature, by decisive majorities and presented to Gov. Banks for his approval has received his signature, and been returned to the House, accompanied by a lengthy message, embracing his reasons therefor.

MASSACHUSETTS REGISTER. Messrs. Adams, Sampson & Co., 31 Washington street, Boston, have published the ninety-second serial number of the Massachusetts Register, a work which contains a full record of the government and various institutions of the state, and general information of the most useful character, including lists of officers, of the professions, courts, corporations, municipal and county officers, custom houses and post offices, newspapers, &c. The work has long been known as a reliable authority, and the publishers have aimed to make it as accurate and complete as possible for a work of its kind.

For the Patriot.
Think of Living.

What right has a physician to die in the prime of life? Indeed! Are physicians endowed with organs that are better than those of the rest of mankind? True, they have all the accumulated wisdom of ages since Hippocrates, the father of medicine, but what availeth it, what do they know of disease? Can they even define it? False doctrines have been so long taught by scientific men, that the world is stupefied, and in its deluge it cannot trace the connection between cause and effect. The savans have not learned that stimulation is unnatural, and wears out the vital forces, while nutrition replenishes the waste that is constantly going on in every living thing; and the people have gone so far astray in following the siren voice of science, that they do not recognize the gentle pleadings of nature. Not that science and nature are at variance, but that the professors of science are in deadly warfare against nature.

When an organ is diseased, the doctors administer stimulants, drugs, poisons, to aid in throwing off the disease, and thus new diseases are created; for, whenever any abnormal or unnatural substance is introduced into the system, the proper forces are set to work to expel it, and this action is stimulation, or disease; the effort of nature to restore the system to its normal condition, which is made at the expense of vital force, and the irretrievable loss of so much life, and cannot be aided by stimulants or poisons, for these increase the expenditure of vitality, and are therefore worse than useless.

Uncle Sam is sick; he is troubled with the "Mormons," and it has been proposed (after the fashion of the doctors, of prescribing one evil to combat another) to send the filibuster Walker and his crew to drive out the disease (the Mormons). But it seems to me the union of the filibusters and Mormons (the two evils in one) would be the natural result of such a course of "heroic practice," making confusion worse confounded, and that the "let alone" system would be much better.

But nature can be aided in her efforts to restore her health, just as she can be aided to retain it; by supplying the hygienic conditions of health; proper diet, pure air and water, exercise, light chambers, etc., all of which are necessary to preserve a "sound mind in a healthy body." By proper diet, I mean such food as will nourish and replenish the system without causing stimulation, which is that feverish action of nature in expelling impurities or poisons from the system, and which Lebig and all our celebrated chemists mistake for the invigorating action of the poisons on the living system.

This absurd and palpable blunder consists in mistaking vital for chemical action, and underlies the modern doctrine of heat-forming or respiratory food, and has led to innumerable bad habits, false theories, and admirable compounds of alkalies, condiments, fish, flesh and fowl, as food, instead of simple "fruits and farinacea;" of all sorts of beverages and alcoholic liquors, instead of water, for drink; and of all the deadliest poisons as medicines to bother the system and stop remedial effort, instead of aiding nature by supplying favorable circumstances and normal agencies; and its effects may be seen in the increase and complications of diseases, the shortness of life and degeneracy of mankind. Reader, these are no new fangled notions of my own, though they may be new to you; their chief exponent is the well known Water Cure Journal, and they are entertained by a large and steadily increasing band of very sensible people.

"The Young America."

Mr. Eorroto:—Allow me to bring into notice a story little magazine, called "The Young America," edited and published by two young men of Boston, which only needs to be read to be appreciated. It contains a fair proportion of original matter, poetry, anecdotes, &c., in fact, everything necessary for any good publication, and is suited to all classes—old and young.

In their editorial they say—We more particularly keep in view the interests of boys, and to them look particularly for support; knowing it to be the duty of all young Americans to assist "Young America."

It is issued monthly—thirty cents for six months—and is to be obtained of Richardson & Andrews, editors; or, at Israel Moody, 290 Washington street. ALBERT.

RAILROAD TIME. Attention is called to the alterations on the Old Colony and Fall River Railroad. See advertisement.

Summary of Intelligence.

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED.

The Cincinnati Gazette says that there are in the third ward in that city a very large number of families, many of whom are mechanics, who subsist upon one meal per day!

Only seven lawyers are known to be elected to the new House of Representatives in New Hampshire. This is a remarkable occurrence, in a legislative body numbering three hundred and sixteen members.

Among the bills passed at the last session of the Maryland Legislature was one to aid in the erection of a monument in Independence Square, Philadelphia, in honor of the Declaration of Independence.

On the 20th of January two Americans at Constantinople fitted up a sleigh, and drove around the city—an exploit never before accomplished in that place. They passed up and down by the Sultan's palace. The Turks were delighted.

Wheat, although considered by some as a native of Sicily, originally came from the central table land of Tibet, where it yet exists as a grass, with small, mealy seeds. Rice was first brought from South Africa, whence it was taken to India, and thence to Europe and America.

The New Orleans (La.) True Delta says there is a movement going on in that city, having for its object the introduction of the custom of ladies carrying fire-arms—small pistols, such as are known as vest pocket pistols, and which can be stowed without inconspicuously, in the pocket of the fair show-er's dress, in order to protect themselves from ruffian violence and insult. Society must be in a sad state in New Orleans, if this statement is true.

A law has been enacted by the Legislature of Louisiana, providing that any free negro coming into that State shall be seized, and after ten days' notice, sold into slavery, half the proceeds to go to the State, the other half to the complainant. The only exception is in favor of negroes actually employed in foreign vessels.

Between the first of January and the middle of February, nineteen women were burnt to death in Great Britain, whose clothes took fire in consequence of expansion of hoops.

A member in the Virginia legislature, recently, stated that there had been, in the last thirty years, a decline in slaves, as an element of population, of seven per cent.

For the Patriot.
Lines on the Death of Freeman Hunt.

It beats no more, that noble heart;
That lofty brow is still;
That active brain—time manhood's chart,
Is pulseless now and still.

And is this all we honor'd here?
Ah, no! A Christian soul
Has left us for a brighter sphere,
Where death has no control.

Where first he drew his mortal breath,
We lay him down to rest.
He honor'd thee—our Mother Earth;
Receive him to thy breast.

While faithful friends with weeping eyes
Consign him to the tomb,
The Saviour meets him in the skies,
And bids him welcome home.

The noblest tribute we can pay
To him, whose life was truth,
Is this,—To walk in Wisdom's way.
And imitate his worth. F. M. A.

Hovey's Magazine of Horticulture thus speaks of the Diana Grape Vine:
"Last fall we had a full crop of large, fine clusters, ripening a week before the Isabella, and so superior in that variety, that they obtained the prize of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, as the best native grape. It is a most valuable bearer, and no less so the taste peculiar to our native grape than any other variety. It also possesses a peculiarity which we have not noticed in other sorts. As early as the first of September, when the berries change to a grayish tone, they are quite sweet and agreeable to the taste, but they do not acquire the high flavor which constitutes its great excellence until they assume their full color, when it is one of the handsomest grapes we have ever seen."

For the Patriot.
Letter from the far West

WINONA, (MINNESOTA), March 26, 1858.

FRIEND GREEN: I have sat down to write you a few simple illustrations of our State or Territorial affairs at the present time.
Also, in simple language, without any disposition to point as our Western writers do, our advantages, and what makes us at present the first State in the West.

Most Western writers are apt to use a large amount of poetry and eloquent language in describing the advantages of the West, and perhaps I have been guilty (if you so term it) of the same degree of enthusiasm in my letters heretofore. Be assured, however, that I have not done it for the motive which has been ascribed to some writers, that of inducing emigration to their particular state or location. Whatever has been written in regard to the physical nature of Minnesota, has not been extravagant or swollen beyond its limits. I think in any book or letter describing it that I have read,
that all will agree with me who have remained here any length of time, and have been particular in their observation, that for health, agriculture and beautiful scenery, there is no State or Territory, with the exception of Oregon, perhaps, that will surpass it. And in extent of fertile prairies, beautiful rivers, lakes and streams, even surpasses that. If we had some of her lofty mountain scenery, we would have a combination that would surpass any state in the world.

I know well the class of readers that will peruse this letter. The most of them have known me from my boyhood up; and knowing me—the mechanic, the farmer, the professional man, the merchant and all of whatever degree in Society, know well that my letters are not written to draw them away from home and good employment; but only, if possible, to aid them in elevating their present condition. My whole object and aim is to do so.

The West will, as long as this generation lives, be a source of great attraction to the young, sparkling youth, and those who prefer a farmer's life to all others. These will predominate as manufacturers cannot compete with cheap labor at the East, no more than New England can compete with Old England for the same reason. I have no doubt for a moment, that if the mechanics and laboring men of New England who are now leaving away their time and barely living, as it were, from hand to mouth; also,
those who have employment, but have nothing ahead, and in thousands of cases with large families, could be made to realize how easy it is to become independent at the West, with the same amount of labor that they have to perform there to get a living, that they would if they had the means to go West, create such a revolution in manufactures, that New England would be paralyzed and remain so for many years;
at least, until they should be filled up again by foreign emigration. That it has had an effect, I have no doubt, already, for what little emigration has been going on for the last five years. Such is the tone of many Eastern journals as to depopulating towns in the interior, and their disposition to cry down
the West, rather than speak in tones it deserves, is what leads me, partially, to believe
so.

I would simply say to those who are in the habit of discouraging those who are living in the manner I have mentioned, that they are,
in my humble opinion, doing a great wrong to the party they address their remarks to, as well as conveying very erroneous ideas. Influencing those who this rich domain was intended for, to stay away until occupied and held by speculators and immensely rich individuals and corporations both from home and abroad.

The ambitious young man who has no means or way of procuring means to get West in these times, often seeks the drum shop and "gambling hell" to pass away his time, and soon, oh! how soon, is he so deeply engulphed in his miseries that no power can restore him to his former self. Read er—young man—if you are, save your money,
that you are wasting in vain pursuits—
in the rum shop; take the advice of one who has experienced all that you now are experiencing. One who has travelled in and out of Boston, been to all the dances, firemen's and military speers; who has seen to his sorrow the evil effects. One whom the West has restored and made him sensible of your condition. I say, take my advice, cease the pernicious habit of drinking. Save your money, that is from penny to dime leaking away. Save them for one year, and you will find yourself possessed of enough to go West. The West, where you will find all on a level. No titled, moneyed, or coffish aristocracy. Where real merit takes the lead in Society. This true, you might if you leave off bad habits, become a good and great man there by perseverance; but you are left independent; you depend on yourself; and are not annoyed by the cox-ies and richly-livered and fast-boned, guns and horses of inherited riches. I am now talking to the poor boy, who, from a feeling of pride, having a good education and good social accomplishments, and seeks to keep up these brainless nabobs in what is called fashion.

The West now is in its infancy. You are the men we want here, to frame our laws, and shape our social condition. You have education, an article in the West of priceless value. You have ingenuity—our streams and fields open a wide field for your future greatness. You have honesty, you are wanted here now! now!! to head off the vile, avaricious and dishonest speculators and politicians. The West opens wide her arms to receive you. She wants you instead of occupying the miserable positions you hold,
to take charge of her schools, lands, and advance education, that you may receive honor and your children profit thereby. She wants you, in a word, to Americanize these vast provinces, before she is flooded with an infamous and superstitious race from the Old Country. The foreigners are coming in swarms. They want to be Americanized—or a portion of our confederacy will be represented, by those speaking a foreign tongue or not be represented at all.

We are all apt to think the States does not extend beyond a stone throw of where we live; or in other words, our shoulders bear up a world of trouble. States, towns, homes or ourselves, are of more importance than all others; we seldom in the East take the right view of the West, because there is not that cultivated society, and all the advantages of older States. We forget that in it lies the greatest wealth of the nation.
This wealth was intended for the children of the first settlers of our Eastern Colonies. It was intended for those who had become inured to the trials and hardships of a New England life. Her mechanics, farmers and scholars, to the West let them come. Like her Douglasses, Cass, Washburn, Chase, Sil-bey, Wentworth, Burke, and a host of others from the rough hills of New England. Our country is becoming so extended that every educated man will be wanted to take care of it. Leave your homes; be dependent on yourself; that you may know how to govern as well as to be governed. Our present territorial troubles are occasioned more by the illiterate, ungentlemanly, dishonest politicians than anything else. In Minnesota, we could hardly get along without our people were well tutored with New Eng-landism.

Minnesota now stands at the door of Congress begging admission into the Union.
The people have become very uneasy and now threaten to set up an independent sovereignty.

The Legislature have now been in session
three months, at a very heavy expense; doing but a little in the way of legislation, except to pass laws to induce emigration to our borders the ensuing season. I will give you a few of their most prominent acts that you may judge how we do business in a new country. In the first place to show how we rub over the difficulty of being without executive government. We are the second Monday in April to amend our constitution that the officers chosen at last fall election for our new State, are to be sworn in on the first of May, and we proceed as an independent state, unless we are admitted before that time. Should we be admitted or not, all acts of the Legislature up to that time will be re-enacted in a mass.

Free banking laws, similar to the Wisconsin laws, has passed both Houses. We are to have new usury laws; interest without limit. Homestead exemption laws, allowing all who have any desire to be dishonest to save all. The most important bill, however, is now under discussion by the House, having passed the Senate, by a large majority, $5,000,000 loan bill of State credit, to the different projected railroads, of which,

by the way, we are to have the centre here,
in Winona, for the transit road $1,500,000.
This bill will pass the House by a large majority, and generally conceded by the people, who are to vote on that at the same time that they do the former mentioned Constitutional Amendment as to swearing in State officers.

With the exception of the Homestead laws, I think thus far the Legislature have acted wisely. You in the East will think we are a fast people when we are a State of only 1,000,000 inhabitants, pass an act issuing state bonds for five millions of dollars for railroad purposes.

The bonds are well secured; perhaps better than any other state bonds in the Union. There is no possible way that they can ever prove a tax upon the people. Proprietors and owners in the bill (which I will send you when it appears in full) to insure the building of the roads. On our being admitted into the Union, the bonds will be negotiated, our railroad commenced, a prosperity will attend our new State, that will outstrip all ridicule and envy from our less flourishing sister states. Our land grants are the most splendid ever given for railroad purposes, particularly the Transit road, which commences at this point.

The road is one running nearly east and west, varying a little to the North West, and after leaving the Minnesota river, where it is contemplated at some future day intersecting with the great North West route to the Pacific. There is not perhaps a thousand square miles in this whole line but what is good farming land, running through the first portion of Minnesota. I will venture to say that not a rod of its length in the world, passes through a country with more natural advantages and beautiful scenery—Lakes, river, brook, prairie and forest scenery, with scarcely an acre of swamp lands, adorn its whole route.

Thriving towns have sprung up along the line already, and to be named it is almost a miracle. New Englanders must be in mind that with exceptions of our river towns, it costs nothing for common roads.
Add up the expense of a common road from Boston to Plymouth, previous to the building a railroad, and you will find a far greater difference in favor of railroads. I mean, consider the whole tax upon the people besides wear and tear of travellers. Not having been an eye witness of the upper portion of our State, I am not competent to judge as to its co-equal advantages.

I am confident that whatever degree of prosperity attends the United States, that Minnesota, with her natural advantages, geographical position, topography and physical advancement will get a large share.
We have undoubtedly the best wheat growing country in the West, although we are but a little about the "wheat question," we are proud to say we will be in a few years the greatest producers of sheep's wool
of any state in the Union.

I have written a much longer letter than I intended, being deficient of the desirable of reference, it will afford me an inexpressible amount of pleasure, if it should prove the cause of awakening the least degree in my old fellow townsmen—of which not a few will and do have an influence in Congress—to the importance of electing the most high minded and noble men of our country to guard those inexhaustible riches, bequeathed to them by their forefathers, and at once in some way, stop this wholesale squander of public property by pretended public benefactors.

I have not time at present to explain the manner Land offices are conducted but simply say that the system of disposition of public lands is wrong from the beginning to the end.

Officers that are given to broken down politicians, are worth more than the office of President, when confined to what they apparently make out of it. I do not wonder at the throngs of office holders in the United States, although it is alarming.

Yours, as ever,

Hope.

We are pleased to hear from our young friend "Hope," and shall be happy to receive his communications often, but wish to have them as condensed as possible.—Ed

Miscellaneous.

"Meet Lizzie at Six"

That was all the dispatch contained. Four little words; yet what excitement they conveyed in the household at Maple Cottage; the quiet, sober household, whose members at the moment of its reception, were on the point of going to rest for the night.

"Meet Lizzie at six? Was our darling indeed so near us? Two years and three months had passed since our eyes had been gladdened by her girlish beauty; since her voice had mingled with the bird music that floated all the long summer days among the maples. Two years and three months she had been buried among books, in a far away
city, bowing her sunny curls over algebra and geometry, grammar and philosophy, as tutoring at first, because her parents desired it; afterwards cheerfully, to please the teachers she had learned to love; and at last zealously, from pure thirst for the treasures these studies unlocked to her. But it was over now; those toilsome years, and she was on her way to us once more—our Lizzie—our pet and pride—we should "meet her at six!"

See had left B. in the morning; had journeyed without stopping, all day; this we guessed at once; and at eight in the evening, finding a hasty opportunity, she had telegraphed to us the words above. At six the Eastern train arrived at our station. Lizzie was to ride all night, for the sake of reaching home this early. It was like her impulsive, warm-hearted child, that she was

How little we slept that night! What slight sounds aroused us; how early we were all astir—even the baby, and the white-haired grandfather. Meet Lizzie, eh! he said; yes, indeed will we! And the old man's voice caught a youthful tone, and his crutches an elastic movement, as he hobbled about the house, giving orders, as if all the responsibility rested upon him, to be sure.

There was Hannah, too, bewildering the mother or father best? And would she make house or wall? And the mother, smiling all the time, nodded her head to everything, and went hurrying about, with the griddle in one hand, and the egg boiler in the other, coaxing Fanny to curl the baby's hair, and looking at the clock every minute.
But Fanny, with mysterious apparatus of something, was sitting up stairs and down, leaving a book here, a flower there, a daggerette on the table, or a rosey checked full apron in the window—something for Lizzie to see and smile at. Only the father seemed undisturbed. We noticed, to be sure, that the dipples in his cheeks, which Lizzie always said she made with her fingers when she was a babe, looked deeper when he smiled, and that his voice was a trifle less steady when he told Thomas to bring the horses; but he did not like to be considered a demonstrative man, so we only looked significantly at each other, and said nothing.
Still waters are sometimes very deep.

At last the carriage came around, and we got in; two of us, beside the father who was to drive. There was room for more; but it was quite out of her line, the mother said,
to go on a driving drive before breakfast; so we left her on the piazza, with the pickle-dish in her hand, and wiping her eyes with her apron.

It was half a mile to the depot, and the sun not quite risen when we started. How balmy and pure the air was, that soft September morning. We thought, egotists as we are, in our happiness, that nature sym-pathized with us. It seemed as if there had never been so fair a sun rising before, and as if half the glory of the morning would have been wasted, had Lizzie not been coming home.

The cars had not arrived, when we stopped at the station, but we heard the whistle of the locomotive, not very distant; and then those few sweet waiting moments—what a world of blessed anticipation they held! The sun was rising—ah, Lizzie! Lizzie!

At last the train came up—stopped. We looked at the windows; only a row of sad faces! Lizzie must have sat on the other side. A few passengers came out, solemn-faced and silent. We pressed forward—so did those who were going out on the train.
The conductor waved everybody back, then motioned to some one in the car. Two men came out, and slowly descended the steps, bearing a lifeless body—a lady; her features covered by a veil. They bore it into the saloon, and laid it reverently upon the sofa.
Still the conductor waved the crowd back—except our party! He knew us, and turned away his face as we approached.

Then we knew how it was; all except the father; he could not believe! Finally he raised the veil from the dead face. Oh, God!
All Merciful! Is it thus we meet thee, Lizzie, darling, our best beloved, idol of our hearts!

In a brief time we learned the story.
Learned how the Angel of the Lord had "met Lizzie" before us, in the still twilight of that autumn morning, but brief, had wailed her gentle spirit to those who waited for her in the home of angels!

At the very last stopping-place, Lizzie had left the car, to procure some food for a little child who had fainted all night in the arms of a weaned mother. The train stopped but a moment; it was dark, and none of the officials had seen her leave it. She returned hastily to find it moving, made a mis step, fell forward—and the rest—it is a common tale, such as newspapers chronicle every week. The beautiful head with its sunny curls, was what we saw at the station-house.

We shed no tears at first; though it seemed as if a drop would save our hearts from bursting; it would not come! Not even when one, who, we afterwards learned, was on his way to a wedding party, and who journeying with Lizzie but a few hours, had yet learned to know her grief as well as her love, came up and laid, in tearful silence, a bouquet of pure white roses upon her bosom.
We buried them with her; the stranger's kindly offering of sympathy and respect.

Blessed be God for tears! They came at last; came when we saw the mother! That scene is too sacred for detail. But the old grandfather's mind wandered when he heard the tidings, and all day he sat in his armchair on the porch, listening for the whistle of the train, and saying, as his dull ear faintly distinguished it:

I reckon Lizzie's aboard that. His angry body gone to meet the girl? When that again, he would seem to comprehend for a few moments, and once he called the creeping body to him, and patting its white shadders, said:

Grandson's old, and lame, and blind; he couldn't go to the station but grandfather's going to see Lizzie first, after all. Yes, yes—grandson's not so far from his little girl as the rest of men, but we'll all follow fast!

Blessed last one! How prone we are to forget this. How hard for our faith to "put back the dead love from her arms," and look upward, upward, to the glory that awaits possess the forever. We mourn these always, Lizzie; our idolatrous hearts yield but so slowly to the Father's chastening, yet in it
we feel the earnest of joy to come; we know these clinging earth-gravels cannot hold us back from their forever; we know that we shall yet "meet thee at six," at the glorious sunrise of the Resurrection Morning.

Children's Temper.

Bad temper is often the result of unhappy circumstances than of an unhappy organization; it frequently, however, has a physical cause, and a peevish child often need dieting more than correcting. Some children are more prone to show temper than others, and sometimes on account of quickness which are valuable in themselves. For instance, a child of active temperament, sensitive feeling, and eager purpose, is more likely to meet with constant jars and rubs than a dull, passive child; and if he is of an open nature, his inward irritation is immediately shown in bursts of passion. If you repress these ebullitions by scolding and punishment, you only increase the evil by changing passion into sulkeness. A cheerful, good-tempered tone of your own, a sympathy with his trouble, whenever the trouble has arisen from no fault on his part, are the best antidotes; but it would be better still to prevent beforehand as much as possible, all sources of annoyance. Never fear spoiling children by making them too happy. Happiness is the atmosphere in which all good affections grow—the wholesome warmth necessary to make the heart-blood circulate healthily and freely; unhappiness, the chilling pressure which produces here an inflammation, there an excrement, and, worst of all, "the mind's green and yellow sickness—ill temper."

Honorable Conditions.

Many years ago, in what is now a flourishing city in this State, lived a stalwart blacksmith, fond of his pipe and of his joke.
He was also fond of his blooming daughter,
whose many graces and charms had ensured the affections of a susceptible young printer. The couple, after a season of blything, cooing, "engaged" themselves, and nothing but the consent of the young lady's "parent" prevented their union. To obtain this, an interview was arranged, and Typo prepared a little speech to astonish and convince the old gentleman, who sat enjoying his favorite pipe in perfect content. Typo dilated upon the fact of their long friendship, their mutual attachment, their hopes for the future, and like topics, and taking the daughter by the hand, said:—

"I now, sir, ask your permission to transplant this lovely flower from its parent bed"
—but his "phelinks" overcame him, he forgot the remainder of his rhetorical flourish, blushed, stammered, and finally wound up with—"from its parent bed, into my arm!"
The father keenly relished the discomfiture of the son, and after removing his pipe and blowing a cloud, replied:—

"Well, young man, I don't know as I've any objections, provided you will marry the gal first.—Granite State Register.

Amusing.

A few miles below Poughkeepsie, New York, there now lives, and has lived for several years past, a worthy clergyman, a man
however, very short in stature. Upon a certain Sunday, eight years ago, this clergyman was invited by the pastor of a church in that village, to fill his pulpit for the day. The invitation was accepted, and Sunday morning saw Mr. ——— in the pulpit. Now it appeared that the pulpit was a very high one,
and accordingly nearly hid the poor little clergyman from view. However, the congregation, out of respect, managed to keep their countenances, and with other phantoms, seemed religiously anxious for the text.
They were not obliged to wait long, for a nose and two little eyes suddenly appeared over the top of the pulpit, and a quavering, treacherous voice proclaimed sweet tunes the text: Be of good cheer, it is I, be not afraid."

A general roar of laughter followed the announcement—the clergyman became confused, and turned all sorts of colors. Many in the general uproar left the church, and it was a long time before the minister was enabled to proceed with his sermon, so abruptly broken off. Afternoon came, and the little man, standing on a footstool, had a fair view of his audience. The text was announced in due form.—"A little while and ye shall not see me, and again a little while and ye shall not see me." In the great earnestness, and stepping back like his elevated feeling, and disappeared from all his hearers. The effect may be more readily imagined than described.

Ancient Uses of Cork.

There are some substances in the use of which we have not made much progress, not only from the fact that other materials have been discovered to supply their places, and partly from the substance itself possessing such palpable peculiarities that its earliest discoverers must have seen at once for what it was most applicable.

This is the case with cork. The Romans used it as soles to put into their shoes, to keep their feet warm and dry; and as there were no high heels in those days, the ladies tried it to make them appear tall. Cautiva in the Tiber with the aid of a cork jacket. Fishermen used it as floats to their nets and buoys to their anchors; and, Pliny tells us that it was employed as stoppers to ves-els of all kinds. The old Spaniards lined the walls of their houses with cork, because it kept them warm, and prevented dampness;
and lastly, the Egyptians manufactured coffins of it, which, being lined with a resinous composition, preserved the dead from decay.

The method employed in Portugal of cutting the bark and burning the outside, is the same today as it was one thousand years ago; so that, altogether, we cannot say that we have done very much with cork that has not been done before. It is quite true that we made a start, and discovered some new uses and appliances for this cheap and pleasant material.

Silent Influence.

The Bible calls the good man's life a light,
and it is the nature of light to flow out spontaneously in all directions, and fill the world unconsciously with its beams. So the Christian shines, I would say not so much because he wills, as because he is a luminous object. Not that the active influence of Christians is made of no account in the figure, but only that this symbol of light has its propriety in the fact that their unconscious influence is the chief influence, and has its precedence in its power over the world.—
And yet there are many who will be ready to think that light is a very tame, feeble instrument, because it is noiseless. An earthquake, for example, is to them a much more vigorous and effective agency. Hear how it comes thundering through the solid foundations of nature. It rocks a whole continent.
The noblest works of man, cities, monuments, and temples, are if a moment looked to the ground, or swallowed down the opening gulfs of fire. Little do they think that the light of every morning, the soft, gentle, and silent light, is an agent, many times more powerful. But let the light of the morning cease and return go more, let the hour for morning come, and bring with it no dawn; the out-cries of a horror-stricken world fill the air and make as it were, the darkness visible. The beasts go wild and frantic at the loss of the sun. The vegetable growths turn pale and die. A chill creeps on, and frosty winds begin to howl across the freezing earth. The vital blood of all creatures, stop, congealed. Down goes the frost towards the earth's center.—The heart of the sea is frozen, nay, the very earthquakes are themselves frozen in, under their fiery caverns. The very globe itself, too, and all the fellow planets that have lost their sun, have become mere balls of ice, swinging silent in the darkness. Such is the light that revisits us in the silence of the morning. It makes no shock or scar. It would not wake an infant in its cradle. And yet it perpetually re-creates the world, rescuing it, each morning, as a prey from night and chaos. So the Christian is a light, even "the light of the world;" and we must not think that because he shines insensibly or silently as a mere object, he is therefore powerless. The greatest powers are ever those which lie back of the little stirrings and commotions of nature; and I verily believe, that the insensible influences of good men are as much more potent than what I have called their voluntary and active, as the great silent powers of nature are of greater consequence than her little disturbances and tumults.—Dr. Bushnell.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, March 27th, 1858.

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

High School. We call particular attention to the advertisement in another column in relation to the time when the examination of scholars, intending to enter that school, will take place. The notice was accidentally omitted last week, owing to the press of other matter. On Thursday, April 1st, at one o'clock in the afternoon, at the High School House is the time and place appointed. We trust that our young friends will be on hand, and show to the School Committee, that the time they have passed in the Grammar Schools has been worthily employed, and the high position which these schools have hitherto maintained has not decreased in diligence, utility and scholarship.

Fires. On Saturday last, a quantity of grass land was burnt over (supposed to be the act of some juvenile offender) on a vacant lot, lying between the railroad and turnpike,—near the dwelling of N. M. Bean. No particular injury was done. Also, on Thursday afternoon, about 2 o'clock, the woods in front of the residence of Thomas Nightingale, at the west part of the town, was discovered to be on fire. At one time, it threatened serious damage to surrounding property; but the timely arrival of the Engines, who were promptly on the spot, its progress was checked without much difficulty. As in the other case, fortunately, but little damage was sustained. The afternoon being pleasant, the boys thought they might as well have a time, and without further ceremony, cheerfully accepted a pressing invitation from the Tiger Company, to join with them in partaking of a collation at their House. An agreed hour or so was passed, when the Niagara and Vulture Companies took up the line of march for their respective quarters.

Fast Day. Governor Banks has saw fit, by and with the consent of his Council, to appoint Thursday, the 15th day of April next, as a day of "Fasting Humiliation and Prayer." We are naturally a very fast people, and an Executive check, once in a twelve month, may be necessary, to arrest our headlong career. We hope the Legislature will by that time have finished their labors, that they may have an opportunity of taking part in the exercises.

Rich Spring Goods. As the season is fast approaching, when every neat and thrifty housewife feels it not only a pleasure but duty to "Put her house in order," the Messrs Gill & Co., have, in anticipation of their wants, opened in connection with their other business, a very rich assortment of Paper Hangings, of almost every conceivable pattern or figure; which they will be happy to part with on the most favorable terms. Their description of the goods, to be found in another column, is worthy the attention of the reader.

THE INFUSORIAL POLISH. We have seen this article used, and put to the severest test—and in no instance has it failed to accomplish every thing for which it is recommended. In families and for the toilet, it must introduce itself and prove an indispensable article. We are pleased to learn that the proprietors, thus far, have met with their most sanguine expectations—and that the sales are rapidly and steadily on the increase. We refer the reader to the advertisement.

Gentlemen's prime calf Boots, warranted at C. Gill & Co's.

A STRIKE. We learn that the hands in the employ of Charles Hardwick, of this town, stone contractor, are on a strike for higher wages. We know nothing of the merits of the case, further, than it is stated, that the workmen wish to restore their wages to the same standard of other seasons, they having been reduced the past winter, in consequence of the times.

TOWN LIQUOR STORE. Mr. Whitcher, the authorized Agent, agreeably to a provision of the Maine Liquor Law, for the sale of spirituous liquors in this town, will, we learn, resign his post on the first of May next. Some very respectable names are already before the public for the situation. Among the number, we notice that of our fellow townsman, Dr. Newcomb. We have no particular bias, but think the Doctor presents some strong points. He is a native of the place; is familiarly known to the great mass of our citizens, and professionally, certainly, possesses every qualification for the office. With these facts, we are of opinion, that he would make a very discreet and careful manager for so difficult and troublesome a trust. And we are not alone here—for we have seen a circular, with nearly a hundred names upon it, of our most influential men, strongly recommending him for the office. Our city fathers have the matter in charge—to them we respectfully submit his claims.

For the Patriot. The North School Exhibition.

Mr. Editor:—On Friday evening of last week the inhabitants of the North School District, were favored with an highly interesting exhibition, given by the pupils under the direction of the popular teacher, Mr. L. P. Forbush. The room, (to use a common phrase,) was crowded to its utmost capacity, with parents and friends; and such a numerous gathering we seldom see in our rural district.

The exercises were principally in elocution, as was expected; although we had some good specimens by several classes in that useful branch of education.—Reading—which were very creditable. We love to hear good reading, but to speak figuratively, it is a rara avis in our literary institutions. The subjects for declamation were admirably arranged, and what is better, some were original. The single desecrations were well uttered, with clear enunciation and a natural tone—a strain we always like.

The dialogues in sentiment were a commingling of the pathetic with the mirthful. They were spoken in good spirit and in all freedom from restraint. Indeed, during the recitation of the principal dialogue of the evening, denominated "Lunatic," the scenes setting forth the follies and deceptions of fashionable life, were so well and truthfully delineated, that in the exuberance of our imagination, we almost fancied the characters real. It is not proper to make any laudatory distinctions of those scholars who excelled, but necessarily obliges me to say, that while all won laurels, some did better than others. "Madame Lunatic" and the "Country Cousin" were exceedingly well personated, to the no small gratification of the attentive audience.

A little episode in the evening's entertainment, which wandered from the romance to the reality, was the presentation of a beautiful silver cake basket and cream pitcher as a spontaneous and unexpected boon from the scholars of the school to Mr. Forbush.

Appropriate emblems of the esteem of the whole school to their teacher were presented with an appropriate address, by Miss Emily Glover, a daughter of Horatio N. Glover, Esq. She acquitted herself handsomely.—Mr. Forbush's reply to this "surprise" gift was feeling and eloquent. He pledged himself to treasure up these gems through life as memento of pupils' love to a teacher.

The North District School contains forty scholars, of all ages usually found in a mixed school.

In the last annual Report of the School Committee, they assure us the school continues to present a very satisfactory appearance, and that Mr. Forbush "had never felt at examinations to afford proof of continued effort and improvement." He is re-engaged for another year.

For the Patriot. Think of Living

"What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his health?" The first principle of the Gospel, is health. For without it how can one practice the Christian graces? how much faith or hope is engendered by despondency? How much charity by an attack of gout?

With the finest climate, and the most glorious country upon which the sun shines, we are a nation of invalids; sickness is the rule, and health the exception. It is insulting the Maker, to abuse the matchless temperament He has entrusted to our care, by cramming it with every unclean thing excusing ourselves with the pert phrase—what are "the good things" made for if not to eat? And, when we have destroyed the beautiful gift by culpable ignorance or wanton abuse, the blasphemous world calls it a "mysterious dispensation of Providence."

The immutable laws of Heaven cannot be evaded; the inevitable consequences of disobedience, is disease; either physical, mental or moral, according to the nature of the law violated; and if not absolutely painful, it is an evil which precludes perfect happiness until reformation and obedience ensue. Disease—or evil—always follow disobedience, and is the punishment for sin or error; and the sole object of punishment is the reformation of the disobedient. Thus are the laws of Nature enforced. And herein is the grand secret which the world is so slow to comprehend; which is the foundation of true government, and the key-stone of all true reform. Theologians as well as Health reformers, can never regenerate mankind with anything short of the promulgation of this doctrine, which is the true gospel, "The glad tidings of great joy unto all men." When this is universally believed, righteousness and its concomitant, happiness, will be the object all will strive to attain, by strict obedience to the laws of Heaven and Nature; which are so simple that they may be read in the laughing sunbeams as they dance in the bubbling spring, or heard in the sighing of the green and gold plumed corn, as the zephyrs of heaven gambol in its labarins. What can be more promotive of righteousness, than the belief that it will surely be rewarded by happiness, while sin and error will as surely be punished by the evil and misery of disease, which is the process of reformation or regeneration of the depraved body or mind?

Up! Reader, you can hasten the coming of the Millennium by studying the laws of your being, and practicing them, so that your "light may shine unto all that are in the house;" your influence is immeasurable upon your friends and acquaintances. Within you are the opettes of the brute and the attributes of an angel; shall the beast hound out the seraph? Will you become all animal, because you have a few animal wants to supply, and make the glorification of the stomach the "Chief end of man"—and live in Hades, the channel house of the soul? or will you cherish with grateful care the "talents" the "master" has entrusted to your keeping, that in the day of reckoning, he may say, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter into the joys of Heaven?"

Poetry.

Stanzas.

Though bright thy morn of life may seem,
Remember clouds may rise,
And trust not to the transient gleam
Of calm and shining skies.

So tread life's path in sunshine's gleam,
With cautious, holy fear,
That when grief's shadows o'er it rest,
Its memory may be dear.

If dark life's path should lead thee,
Despond not at its gloom,
Joy's cloudless sun may rise for thee,
And hope's bright flow 'tween bloom.

So tread life's path, though bestrewed,
That thou in happier hours
With pure and peaceful gratitude
May 'st bless its fragrant flowers.

In clouds and sunshine, calm and storm,
Pursue thy even way,
Nor let thy better hopes be born
Of things that must decay.

Rejoice with trembling, mourn with hope,
Take life as it is given,
Its rough ascent, its flowery slope
May lead alike to Heaven.

Better Grin than Growl.

Let hard times assail us,
Let poverty nail us,
Like mystical horse shoes to every wall,
Let deep tribulation,
And fierce desolation,
Spread over all like a fearful pall;
Though empty our purses,
Though creditors curse us,
And quarrels are squeezed till the eagles all howl,
Let us have merry faces,
And smiles for all places,
Remembering 'tis better to grin than to growl!

What though banks are breaking,
And "big houses" quaking,
Let one's grin all day, ever be done,
Our crosses can't mend it,
Our weeping won't end it,
Why not take the bright side, and call it all fun?
Why not tolerate pleasures,
Or moderate measures,
Bring back our lost confidence? Lift the dark
No! no! To-day's sorrow Brings no brighter tomorrow
When things will go bad, let us grin and not growl.

But let us keep thinking
That though we are sinking,
We can't go much further, because it won't pay!
The old saw not forgetting,
That cured loss of fretting,
"The hour that is darkest is just before day,"
Though vacant our purses,
Though creditors curse us,
Though quarrels are squeezed till the eagles all howl,
Let us have merry faces,
And smiles for all places,
For surely 'tis better to grin than to growl!

Judge Gently.

Oh, there was many a tear shed then,
And many a heart broken,
For want of a gentle hand put forth,
Or a word in kindness spoken.
Then, O! with brotherly regard,
Greet every sob of sorrow,
So from each tone the dropping heart
New hopes, new strength, shall borrow.
Nor turn, with cold and scornful eye
From one who hath offended;
But let the hardness of proof
With kinder tones be blended.
The seeds of good are everywhere:
And in the soil best sown,
Sown'd by the quickening rays of love,
Put forth their tender blossom.

The World.

Never rail at the world—it is just as we make it:
We are not the flower, it is we and the seed.
And as for ill luck, why it's just as we take it—
The heart that is earnest has no impediment.
You question the justice which governs in its broad,
And say that the search for true friendship is vain;
But remember, this world, though it be not the best,
Is the next to the best we shall ever attain.

Anecdotes.

A few evenings since a very pretty young widow, of the name of W—, who was known by the entire congregation to be greatly in want of a husband, was praying
with great fervency:
"Oh! Thou knowest what is the great desire of my heart!" she exclaimed.
A man! responded a brother with a broad accent.

A woman is at the bottom of all mischief,
said Joe.
Yes, said Frank, and when I used to get into mischief, my mother was at the bottom of me!

I am not afraid of a barrel of cider, said a toper to a temperance man.
I presume not, was the reply: for from your appearance, I guess a barrel of cider would run at your approach.

My dear, said a wife to her husband, did you ever read of the plague in London?
No, I don't want to read of it; it is enough to have a plague in my own house.

Hallo there, how do you sell wood?
By the cord.
Pshaw! How long has it been cut?
Four feet.
How dumb! I mean how long has it been since you cut it?
No longer than it is now.
See here, old fellow, you are too bright to live long.

Pure Potash

IN TIN CANS.

B. T. BABBITT,

63 & 70 Washington Street, N. Y.,

And 38 India Street, Boston.

THE Proprietor of this POTASH has for many years established a reputation for having the most reliable standard for the strength of POT-ASH. The addition has become so general,
that it has, notwithstanding its valuable properties, gone nearly out of use. The Proprietor has taken the responsibility of substituting his name
to every package, and warrants the strength to
be uniform, and when used always producing the same result. Potash must not be confused with soda, which is destructive in making soap;
it makes the lather soft they did not have good ly, &c. On the other hand, Potash is that gentle out of use, it is so important to handle, being put in wooden cases, and becoming a real trouble in many cases, and very troublesome to the customer.

Now the Proprietor first obtains pure Potash,
always being the same strength, and producing
the same result, and will warrant it in all cases.
The directions are followed, to produce the desired effect in making soap, and all other purposes for which Potash is used, with full directions for making the best of Soft, Hard, or Emulancy Soap. It is made with little trouble, the ly is all prepared in five or ten minutes.

1 lb. Potash warranted to cut 5 lbs. of grease into good soap.
